SHERMAN'S VIEWS

Of Principal Events In American Statecraft.

LONG-KEPT SECRETS REVEALED.

Grant, Blaine, Harrison, Garfield and Other Republican Presidents Praised For Their Personal Worth But Are Also Shown In the Light of Scheming Politicians. Praises Hayes Highly.

CHICAGO, Oct. 19.—The intrigues, the jealousies and the traitor's knifethrusts of the last half century of American statecraft are revealed in the fierce light of stern criticism in "John Sherman's Recollections of Forty Years in the House, Senate and Cabinet," just published in this city. The fear that the venerable senator would reveal secrets long kept from the public in his forthcoming work has been to an extent realized. Grant, Garfield, Blaine, Arthur, Harrison and other Republican leaders are spoken of with unstinted praise for their high personal worth or statesmanship, but each is in guarded and covert language shown in the less commendable light of scheming politicians. The criticism is almost invariably implied rather than direct, but it stands out clearly in the work as a whole.

Owing to the close association of Mr. Sherman and James A. Garfield, the criticism of the nomination of the latter for president of the United States is perhaps one of the most striking features of the book. The author, while carefully avoiding a direct charge of treachery on the part of the ex-president, very significantly makes it plain that Mr. Garfield was nominated at a convention to which he had gone as the trusted leader of the Sherman forces.

The sting felt by Garfield's defeat in 1880 is shown by a sentiment expressed during the discussion of the national convention of 1892, where the senator remarks:

"From later developments I became satisfied that Harrison could not be elected, that Platt and a powerful New York influence would defeat him if nominated. I therefore preferred the nomination of a new man, such as William McKinley, but he had committed himself to Harrison, and according to my code of honor could not accept a nomination if tendered him."

Again the author reverts to the Chicago convention in discussing the character of President Garfield. Of his personality and eloquence he speaks in the highest terms. His will power, he says, was not up to his personal magnetism. He adds that his opinion changed easily. In this connection he says:

"When I proposed to him to be a delegate-at-large to the Chicago convention, he no doubt meant it in good faith to support my nomination."

Something of the political scheming that again resulted in the defeat of the Ohio statesman in the national convention of 1888 and brought about the nomination of ex-President Harrison can easily be read between the lines in that part of the work devoted to this struggle. In discussing the result Mr. Sherman says that he became satisfied that one delegate from New York controlled the entire delegation from that state, and between Saturday night, when the nomination seemed certain to go to Sherman, and Monday morning, when the tide turned in favor of Harrison, a corrupt bargain was made in the interests of the latter which secured him the support of New York and gave him the nomination. Continuing the author states, in fairness to the ex-president: "It is to the credit of General Harrison to say that if the reputed bargain was made, it was without his consent at the time."

On the eve of another national campaign in which ex-President Harrison is expected to figure prominently, Mr. Sherman does not hesitate to state that in 1892 he did not consider Harrison a strong candidate. To his cold and abrupt manner he attributes his unpopularity at that time.

Space is devoted by the author to an account of the important events of each administration. In this connection Mr. Sherman lays bare many of the jealousies, political bickerings and clash of ambitions that disturb the harmony of the party in power. Of Grant's administration, he says, it was a period of scandal and slander.

At the age of 72 years Senator Sherman recalls the affair over the attempt to remove Chester A. Arthur from the collectorship of the port of New York with much feeling. Arthur is shown up in an unenviable light, and the attitude of Roscoe Conkling toward the president is caustically commented upon.

Throughout that part of the work relating to President Hayes, Mr. Sherman speaks in the highest praise of the chief executive of the nation.

There is less of a personal narrative in the book than might be expected.

President Diaz Will Not Sanction a Prize Fight on Mexican Soil.

LAREDO, Tex., Oct. 19.—In an interview a few days ago in regard to the Corbett-Fitzsimmons fight taking place on the Mexican side of the Rio Grande, L. Lameda Diaz, Mexican consul in this city, expressed himself freely on the subject. He was seen again yesterday. Senor Diaz was authorized to say that President Diaz was opposed to allowing prize fighting in Mexico, and the correspondent was directed to say that the proposed fight would not come off on Mexican soil.

The consul was shown the dispatch from El Paso which stated that the business men had raised $15,000 to pay for the Mexican concession. Senor Diaz was very emphatic in his denial that the Mexican government would make any concession at any price.

"We do not need money," he said, "and if we did we should not sell Mexican dignity for any amount of it. There is no concession for sale at El Paso, and I am officially authorized to state that President Diaz will not permit the fight to take place on Mexican soil."

MAXIM GUNS

Ordered by Both Great Britain and Venezuela.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—That the Venezuelan question is approaching an acute stage with possibilities of resistance by the South American government to British aggression, was signified by disclosures made in New York yesterday on the best authority. The government of Venezuela is providing itself with modern armament, and among other supplies has ordered ten improved Maxim guns from the British firm which manufactures them. The order was placed through a New York firm, and the English house, it is supposed, does not know the destination of the goods.

At the same time the syndicate of United States capitalists which has secured concessions on the Venezuelan gold lands claimed by Great Britain, is preparing to send a large force of prospectors, miners and workmen into the field.

REVIEW OF TRADE

Speculative Markets Not Entirely Encouraging.

EXPORTS OF COTTON ARRESTED

Because of the Late Advance In Prices. Imports of All Kinds Largely In Excess of Exports—Outward Movement of Wheat Slow, While Shipments of Corn Are Increasing—Textiles Strong.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—R. G. Dun & Company's weekly review of trade says: The events of the week are promising in nature, though to speculative markets not entirely encouraging. The great advance in cotton had arrested exports and so deranged exchanges that shipments of gold was for a time apprehended, but the break in the market indicates that the natural movement of the product may soon be restored. The halting of demand and moderate yielding of prices in the great industrial markets show that a season of reasonable attention to natural conditions has arrived, and gives hope that the future demand will be more nearly proportioned to actual consumption.

Other merchandise exports are small from New York for two weeks, 10 per cent less than last year, with imports in the two weeks of October 29 per cent more than last year. In September dutiable imports were 54.2, and for nine months 53.8 per cent larger than last year.

Wheat does not go out freely, and the attempt to advance prices on Monday was followed by an immediate decline. The Atlantic exports, flour included, have been in the past three weeks 4,558,155 bushels against 7,248,111 last year, and the big shipments from Russia and of late from Argentine, show that the world is not yet obliged to pay Atlantic prices for American wheat. Western receipts for the week were remarkably large—7,733,000 bushels, and for three weeks 21,638,977 against 14,017,261 last year. The rush of wheat to market and the largest output of flour ever known at Minneapolis, are not evidences of a great shortage in yield, but the price has changed only an eighth for this week.

Corn is stronger without clear reason, for while exports in three weeks are 3,326,284 bushels, against 236,703 last year, they can at best dispose of only an insignificant fraction of the great yield.

The iron industry is still fully engaged on old orders, but new business is so scanty that many of the works are seeking it at some concessions in price, and only large contracts have been made at $1.75 to $1.80 for bridge plates quoted at 1.9 to 2.0 cents. Billets sell at $21 and rod at $28 at Pittsburg, want of business in wire and wire nail continuing. Mills have to compete in pig iron and other products with speculators who took large quantities on advancing prices, and actual consumption will not be fairly measured until the effects of the speculation are out of the way.

Textile manufacturers have strong markets for materials to support them. But scarcely any advance is seen this week in cotton goods, though the rise for the month has averaged 4.1 per cent, and there seems such a halt as appeared a month ago in iron products. The price of some worsteds has been advanced, but it is as questionable as ever how far the market can be held by domestic makers, and woolen manufacturers have to face not only foreign competition, but an especial tendency of popular demand toward worsted fabrics.

Sales of wool, 21,209,700 pounds at the three chief markets against 13,702,800 in 1893, greatly exceed actual consumption.

Failures for the week have been 263 in the United States against 253 last year, and 46 in Canada against 43 last year.

DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH

Arrested for Violating New York's Coasting Ordinance.

NEW YORK, Oct. 19.—The blotter of MacGowans pass tavern subpolice station in Central park bore this entry yesterday:

Arrested by Officer Michael J. Sweeney, Duke of Marlborough, 23 years old, resident of England, no occupation, single, temporary residence Plaza hotel. Charge, violation of park ordinance. Reprimanded and discharged by Roundsman Ryan.

Thus briefly and officially is recorded the arrest yesterday of the young Duke of Marlborough, who is to wed Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt.

There is an ordinance which forbids wheelmen from riding faster than eight miles an hour in the park, or from coasting down hill. The duke did not know this when he swung his feet over the handlebar and went sliding down the road to One Hundred and Fourth street. Officer Sweeney gave chase, overhauled the young nobleman, and informed him that he was under arrest. Said the duke:

"This is an outrage. I am the Duke of Marlborough. How dare you insult me in this unwarranted manner?"

Officer Sweeney thought the young man was imposing upon him and flippantly replied: "I don't give a d—n who you are."

The duke exhibited his card, but was compelled to accompany the officer to the station, which he did under protest. He said he was ignorant of the law, and offered to pay any fine that might be imposed. After hearing both sides of the case, Roundsman Ryan told the duke that he had been guilty of violating one of the park's most stringent rules, and with a few words of caution released him from custody. The duke refused to be interviewed, but his secretary said that he regarded the proceedings as a gross outrage.

WIPED UP BY FIRE

Business Blocks of Blanchester Burned.

STARTED IN A LIVERY STABLE

And Swept the Better Portion of the Town—Fire Departments of Neighboring Places Respond, But Were Able to Do Little Because of the Scarcity of Water and the High Wind Prevailing.

BLANCHESTER, O., Oct. 19.—At 1:30 yesterday afternoon fire started in Burke's livery stable on Broadway, and never stopped until 7 o'clock in the evening when it had wiped out the whole business portion of the town, five squares, bounded by Center, Short, Grove and Broadway streets and the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern railway. A high wind prevailed and spread the flames like a prairie fire before a gale. The fire departments of Loveland, Lynchburg and Hillsboro responded to a call for help, but were of little avail because of the total lack of fire cisterns and the great scarcity of water.

The flames did as they pleased, and only stopped when the wind went down and the fuel burned out. The result was the total destruction of 37 business houses and their contents, 12 dwellings and contents, two churches, two secret society lodges and the postoffice.

How the fire started has not been explained. The mayor has sworn in 150 special police to watch the salvage. The total loss is variously estimated at from $150,000 to $250,000. All is confusion, and nothing definite is know of the insurance.

HUBER EMPLOYES

ENTERTAINED AT THE Y. M. C. A. BUILDING FRIDAY NIGHT.

The People's Band Furnishes First Class Music—Recitation by Mr. C. E. Long. Refreshments Provided by Mr. F. Huber. A Most Pleasant Evening.

Not less than five hundred citizens of Marion took advantage of the invitation to be present at the reception, Friday evening, tendered by the Young Men's Christian association to the employes of the Huber Manufacturing company.

It was but little after the hour set in the invitation, 7 o'clock, when the guests, the employes of the Huber company and their ladies, began to arrive and were received by various members of the committee on reception, consisting of Messrs. E. Huber, S. E. Barlow, Jacob Miller, Swasey Lyons, Chas. P. Bowen, Frank Zuck, J. Crowley, J. S. Kilbury, J. H. Schroeder, Chas. Haberman and Louis Scherff.

MR. E. HUBER.

Soon the building was well filled and while waiting for the musical and elocutionary program to be taken up the the guests made themselves at home about the building, some strolling through the beautiful halls and corriders, others putting in the time more profitably in the reading room, still others visiting the baths and a great many going into the gymnasium gallery to witness the instruction of a class by Prof. Whyte.

About 8 o'clock the announcement was made that the concert was about to begin and in consequence it was only a short time until the guests, or the greater number of them, were assembled there.

The People's band produced some really superior music, several of the selections being not only decidedly clever but difficult, yet all were rendered with marked effect by the band, with the result that nothing but the greatest praise was heard for the band and its leader, Mr. G. W. Baker.

It is not saying too much when the statement is made that the band boys have far exceeded the highest expectations of their friends and it is seldom if ever that they appear without showing improvement in their work. The fact is beginning to dawn upon Marionites that this city really has a superior band under the direction of a most competent leader.

Between the selections by the band Mrs. C. J. Long rendered, most acceptably, the recitations, "Asleep at the Switch," "Darius Green and His Flying Machine" and "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight."

It was probably 9 o'clock when Secretary Gamble came on the stage and made the announcement that the last selection by the band closed the musical program of the evening and invited the guests to the floor below where refreshments would be served.

While no statement to that effect was made, yet the STAR is reliably informed that the refreshments were provided by Mr. E. Huber and knowing the care which that gentleman ever takes to make all such occasions of the utmost pleasure to his employes it is not hard to believe that upon this occasion, as often before, the guests have Mr. Huber to thank for the delicious ice cream and cake served.

All told, the reception was a decided success and came to the employes of the Huber shops, to their ladies and their friends as a most welcome and never-to-be-forgotten entertainment.

Witty Cowards.

There were few real cowards in the civil war, and yet many an officer on both sides has amusing stories of cowardice to tell, especially of the earlier period of the great conflict. General Joseph E. Johnston, the Confederate commander, now dead, used to relate that in one of those early battles, and in the hottest part of the action, he felt his coattails pulled. Turning about, he recognized a young man who had been employed in his tobacco factory previous to enlistment.

"Why are you not in your place fighting?" the general demanded angrily.

"Why," answered the youth, "I just wanted to tell you that, if you don't mind, I reckon I will take my day off today!"

Admiral David D. Porter once said that he had asked a friend who had fought all through the war, and made an excellent record, if he had ever killed a man.

"Yes," he answered, in a remorseful tone. "At Bull Run I ran at the first fire. A Confederate chased me for ten miles and was then so exhausted that he dropped dead!"—Youth's Companion.

Uncle Sam's Excursion Cruisers.

It is altogether likely that Great Britain will find a good many excursion boats crowding upon her Venezuela course.—Detroit Tribune.

TOWN TOPICS

St Mary's church is now under roof and the interior work can now be carried on all winter.

Miss Ava Wilson entertained a small party of friends at her home on south Main street, Thursday evening.

The street car company is now running but five cars, the sixth car being in the barn to be overhauled and togged up generally.

Miss Durfee gives a music recital by her pupils at the home of Mr and Mrs. H. M. Stowe, of Bradford street, this afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock.

John H. Stoll, the shoe man, is contemplating the erection of an addition to his store room, arranged for the showing of goods by traveling shoe men.

The Elks are now advocating the subject of physical development and it is quite probable that 'Squire Abbington Stowe will be master of ceremonies in the gymnastic exercises.

The Webster, Irving and Longfellow literary societies held very interesting exercises at the High school building Friday afternoon, and quite a number of visitors were present who were highly entertained with the program rendered.

Judge Seney, of Kenton, was in the city Friday night on his way to Kenton. When asked how soon he was going to make that fake item, about his resignation from the circuit bench, good, the judge smiled and could only say "Don-no."

A list of some two hundred new books is being prepared by Miss Hume, of the Mechanic's library, to present to the committee from which to make selections of new books in the near future. The list embraces all the names which have been sent in by the members of the library association.

There is a charming young lady about town who, most unknowingly, may be the means of breaking up one of the clubs of which the city boasts. As various times almost every member of the club in question has fallen in love with her, and there are eight or nine cases of members yet being pretty hard hit. As a result some of the members are not on speaking terms with others and a general suspicious feeling seems to exist generally.

Since Claude Doty won at the county fair and again in the bicycle races at Springfield, so handsomely carrying off the Bushnell cup, all the youths of the town have gone crazy on the electric treatment business, for it is known that Claude had been taking treatment of that kind for some time. As a result all that are not able to take electric treatment at the Sawyer sanitarium or of physicians are working the nickel-in-the-slot machine at the court house.

It would fill the average father or mother with surprise to go around to one of the Y. M. C. A. gymnasium classes and see the wonderful progress which is being made by their children under Prof. Whyte. The work of one of the classes at the gym, Friday night attracted much attention from the visitors and it is impossible to watch a class go through its routine work without inwardly confessing that such exercises must be to the great advantage of the youth of our city.

The organization of Miribah Senate No. 16, K. A. E. O., will be had at the lodge rooms of Marion Lodge No. 402 Knights of Pythias, on the evening of Friday, Oct. 25. The charter list has grown so steadily that the organizer of the senate, Mr. Ellis, sees his way clear to acquiring the names of the required seventy-five charter members by that date, at which time the charter list will be closed and the various officers and committees selected to act up to a date in the month of June, next.

The management of the new opera house expects to have it in every way completed and in perfect working order by Washington's birthday and by that time at least to give its formal opening. Daily letters are received by the projectors of the new house of amusement from first class shows wanting dates but most of the communications in some way bring in the line that the letter was written with the understanding that Marion has a new opera house. It must be that the skating rink and the old wigwam are yet remembered.

A member of the farming community southeast of the city, comes to town with a little kicklet against hickory nutting parties as they are now conducted. He said that he didn't mind when town people came out to get hickory nuts, at all, but that the latest fad of hickory nutting parties, should it become popular, would ruin the farmers. When asked to state where the danger existed, the farmer explained that a nutting party last week came on his way and going to a neighbor asked the privilege of sliding down his straw stack. The privilege was granted and the entire party spent the afternoon in going up one side of the stack on a ladder and sliding down the other side. One of the ladies didn't fancy the [illegible] at first but with one man pushing her up the ladder and another boosting from below she was compelled to mount the ladder and take the trip "a la Kires." Of course the straw stack soon looked as if it had been struck by a cyclone and one artful little fellow in particular would take down with him each trip half a ton of straw. When asked why his neighbor didn't refuse to let the party do the Grimes cellar door act on his strawstack the answer was: "Oh! How can a man refuse one of those sweet young girls when they come around, with tears in their eyes, and swear that they are just dying to slide down a stack?"

How to Make a New Face.

Skin removing for beautifying purposes is having a great vogue among the women who can afford it. At present the price for making over the face of a woman under 50 is $50. An older subject who is greatly wrinkled has to pay $100. The operation confines one to her room for five days and is somewhat painful, but not unbearably so, as the skin removing paste contains cocaine to numb the surface it rests upon. An odd thing is that if you have your wrinkles removed before you are really an old woman they will come again as you advance to the wrinkled age, but if you have them removed after you are as wrinkled as you are ever likely to be they do not return. And a danger of the operation, so far as its complete success goes, is that you will move your face while the paste is getting in its deadly work. If you do, a wrinkle forms and cannot be got rid of. Literally you must bear the pain with an absolutely placid countenance. Even a grin is detrimental.—Philadelphia Times.

THE FLEE AND THE ACTRESS.

No Wonder That Modjeska's Face Wore a Set and Stony Expression.

Two fair actresses were conversing in a cafe on Powell street with the careless ease of their "profesh." Their comments were distinct and audible to the occupants of an adjoining table.

They were chatting about a sentimental scene in which both had appeared on the previous night.

"And just at that moment when he pressed my hand," said one, "and I was supposed to answer with a sob, a flea—oh, such a bite!—began to torture me between the shoulders. It was awful—simply awful. I could not remember my lines. I could not make the sobs come. All I could think about was that horrid flea. I whispered to him, 'Put your arm around me quick.' And he thought I was fainting, and put his hand behind my waist and whispered: 'What is the matter with you, and why are you making such a horrid face? Are you ill?' What could I say? Nothing, of course, but fell back against a chair, and fortunately—oh, how fortunately!—hit it with my shoulder blade, just where that flea was. Then I swung to and fro as if in great mental agony, and thus got in a little scratching. It was just heavenly and did not spoil the scene a bit. When I went off the stage, I had my maid go over the place where that flea had bitten me with a hand brush. She said there was a spot there as big as a dollar."

"Modjeska told me," said the other, "that once at the California in the balcony scene in Juliet, when she was extending both hands and saying, 'Romeo, Romeo, where art thou, Romeo?' she got a nip in the ankle that almost made her cry out. She could not stop. It would have spoiled the scene, and for the minute she had to suffer. One of the critics remarked in his paper next day that during the scene Mme. Modjeska's face wore a set and stony expression. And no wonder, poor lady!"

"When May Muir, who is very susceptible to fleas, is attacked," resumed the other, "she gets up and begins to dance. She can twist about and scratch anywhere while the dance is going on, and nobody notices her. Clara Morris told me that in the dying scene in 'Camille' a flea fastened on to her so viciously that if she had not reached back with her fan and dislodged it she could not have died with any decency. San Francisco is an awful place for fleas."

"Awful, awful!" coincided her friend as she settled with the waiter.—San Francisco Call.

THE NEW SERVANT.

The Redheaded Girl Is Discouraged in Trying to Teach Her Things.

That redheaded girl on Baynes street lately undertook to teach the art of domestic service to a Polish maiden who had been plucked green in the wilderness of Shumway street. The new girl was willing, but ignorant even of the English language. Instruction had to be imparted by object lessons. The first lesson was in lighting the gas. The kitchen treasure was told by her new mistress that she was to turn the stopcock and then apply a match to the end of the pipe. She seemed to comprehend.

The next day the redheaded girl was attracted by a vile smell issuing from the kitchen. On investigation the Polish exile was found standing beside the cold water faucet, patiently lighting matches and holding them under the stream of water, which she had turned on, only to see them immediately extinguished, leaving an odor of charred wood behind.

In the course of a year or two the redheaded girl hopes to be able to impress on the Ruthenian mind the fact that all general principles are subject to modification in practice, and particularly that all iron pipes do not burst into flame when approached by a match.—Buffalo Express.

"Good Night! Good Night!"

There is a tender sweetness about some of our common phrases of affectionate greeting, simple and unobtrusive as they are, which falls like dew upon the heart. "Good night!" the little one lisps as, gowned in white, with shining face and hands, and prayers said, she toddles off to bed. Sisters and brothers exchange the wish, parents and children, friends and friends. Familiar use has robbed it of its significance to some of us; we repeat it automatically, without much thought. But consider. We are as voyagers, putting off from time to time upon an unexplored sea. Our barks of life set sail and go onward into the darkness, and we, asleep on our pillows, take no such care as we do when awake and journeying by daylight. Of the perils of the night, whatever they may be, we take no heed. An unsleeping vigilance of one stronger and wiser than we, who is the eternal good. Good and God spring from the same root, and are the same in meaning. "Goodby" is only "God be with you." "Good night" is really "God night," or "God guard the night." It would be a churlish household in which these gentle forms of speech were ignored or did not exist. Alike, the happy and the sorrowful, day by day, may say "Good night."—Churchman.

Helping In a Trade.

Doherty, an Irish chief justice, used to tell how, when going on his circuit, one of his chaise horses began to plunge furiously, then ran away. "Stop, stop!" he called out. "I really think that horse has never been in harness before!"

"Begorra, your lordship's right! It's his first time, and the masther says that if he brings your lordship safe to the end of the stage he'll buy him."

The Ancient Purse.

For several centuries the purse was always worn fastened to the girdle. A cut purse got his name from the fact that rather than take the time to loose the purse from the belt, where it was secured by buckles, he cut the straps.

HOW HE WORKED A MINE.

The Sheep Mountaineer Enlightens the College Bred Inquirer.

"How do we work a mine?" exclaimed the Sheep mountaineer. "Well, you unsophisticated, undeveloped outcropping of the land of the rising sun, I'll proceed to enlighten your beclouded college bred understanding."

The college bred young man from the land of the rising sun sat down on a $200 to the ton chunk of ore and turned his undivided attention to listening to a discourse on mineralogy.

"We first prospect around until we find a tunnel in on the jugular vein and a pile of ore on the dump. Then if the other feller ain't looking we jump. Then we proceed to sink a shaft on the float, gather all the gouge and sack it, being careful to preserve technical phrases in mineralogical science in so doing. Then we prospect the stockholders with an assessment, and if they don't come down put in a blast. At this point we call the roll, grab a No. 4 warranted not to rip, wear, tear, ravel, cut or run down at the heel ragical, tragical, [illegible] smelter and run up our stacks. If the other feller holds the best hand, the stack will diminish, and we consequently drift for a pay streak. If we don't get through drifting by fall, it's the first thing we go at in the spring. We now concentrate our efforts, and if the silver panned out don't have the eagle stamped on it we sample the outcropping in every saloon within a radius of ten miles and take a fresh chew of tobacco. Then we get to work in earnest, salt the dump and go east and sell all the stock we can. We return, renew our grub pile, pack it into the cabin and wait for spring to open and the snow to go off. During this period we amuse ourselves playing seven up for the drinks. We then import a mining and civil engineer, run a few levels, crosscut for another assessment, get it, cave in the shaft and abandon the property. Then"— The Sheep mountaineer paused for a moment to catch his breath, but the moment was fatal to his learned discourse, for the college bred young man from the land of the rising sun feebly reached for his pick, staggered slowly to his feet, looked wildly through the limpid atmosphere toward the summit of Sheep mountain and disappeared behind the giant outcroppings of the Big Eliza lode.—Lump City Miner.

Large Family.

At a recent public celebration in a New England town, at which several state dignitaries were present, an old gentleman of rural aspect propounded many questions in a hoarse whisper to his nearest neighbor.

"Who's that sitting over there in the big chair?" he demanded.

"The governor," responded his neighbor laconically.

"And who are all those men gathered behind him?" persisted the old man.

"Suit," replied the other shortly.

"All of 'em!" gasped the old man.

His neighbor nodded.

"Well, I swanny!" ejaculated the questioner after a moment's stunned astonishment. "We think we've got a pooty fair show o' Emmonses in this town, but if all those fellows are Sweets, as near of an age as most of 'em look, I should like to see the rest o' the family, that's all I've got to say! My stars! What doin's they must have, come Thanksgivin and Christmas!"—Youth's Companion.

NYE ON BLOOMERS.

HE SAYS THEY ARE GOOD THINGS AND SHOULD BE SUSTAINED.

Which Leads to a Few Remarks About the New Woman and Her Proper Sphere, Wherein Will Be Seen That William Believes In the Girls.

[Copyright, 1895, by Edgar W. Nye.]

Tritoliata McGlew, Monson, Me., writes to know if I will give utterance to a few sublime truths regarding the use of the bloomer, etc.

Yes, I will do so with pleasure. There's many a true word uttered in jest, and I would rather utter a truth accidentally and have it accidentally read by some one who had become tired of hearing truths than to stand up day after day proclaiming a cast iron truth like the notice of a fine of $5 for riding or driving faster than a walk over an iron bridge and never getting any results from it.

Truth is one of the best things we can proclaim to a lost and undone world, but she needs a new dress. Truth in bloomers would make an instantaneous hit.

If we can keep the disagreeable women and elderly ladies of my own unfortunate sex from wearing bloomers they will always be popular.

Attractive women can make any costume popular. It is perfectly marvelous to notice how little clothing an attractive woman may wear and still be the cynosure of all eyes, especially at the opera. Woman should have every facility for health and longevity, not alone that she may be the mother of statesmen who meet each year to repeal the laws they passed the year before, but for her own sake.

NYE DOESN'T OBJECT.

There have been many more startling changes made in woman's costume than those of the present, and they were far less sensible too. There was a time when additions had to be built to the thrones of Europe to admit the royal hoops and headdresses.

While the bloomer is hardly to be adopted for indoor wear, it might be permitted as we get more accustomed to it, and then the wholesome fear of a mouse would gradually disappear. For one I frankly admit that if I had to wear long skirts all the time I would tie them to my ankles and howl from the top of a sideboard if a mouse came in my direction.

It has been proved that a man in his nightdress cannot whip so large a burglar as he can in his trousers. Statistics prove this. Does it not show that skirts are inimical to courage and heroic endeavor?

We should also be consistent and judge of this matter without prejudice. We must not attack the bloomer because we are bowlegged. We must have other and better motives.

Men are often inconsistent in their dress, according to the best standards. For instance, the highlander, it seems to me, would look better even in bloomers, and the mosquitoes would have to then turn their attention to other and nobler objects.

There seems to be a vague fear, too, that woman will finally usurp many of man's rights and at last infest the smoking room, thus taking the spice out of the prevailing smoking room anecdote. This, of course, would be sad, but we must be prepared for anything. Some think that if woman should once get control of the smoking room she would hang up cages full of canaries and introduce little teacups, with souvenir spoons in them, of the kind which will convey a drop of tea into the mouth and take out everything there is in the mouth, including the tea. I would be sorry, of course, to have this happen or to have tea dealt out to me by troy weight without enough in a cup to even convey a wholesome warmth when I upset it in my lap, but I do not think it will ever come to that. I think there will always be a room in every well regulated home where man may go to escape from too much refinement, a place where he may go and express himself fully when things go wrong and the parlor is occupied by refined people, who can sit in a chair without resting their weight on it.

Though I am thoroughly refined and have a sweet nature, so sunny at times that I have to be careful not to sit too near the ferns in the conservatory, and often when I am feeling well one smile will prematurely ripen a lemon tree, yet I can see that the same wisdom which put whiskers on the man and made him strong, so that he would enjoy getting up at dead of night to chase a cow out of the Phlox drummondi, also gave him a desire to escape from a fete champetre and seek for catfish where the worm dieth not.

Woman invades today, it is true, almost every walk of life, and a man who wishes to break the first commandment —I think it is the first—must be all the time apologizing or swear off. I must admit that times are not the same as they used to be, but we have learned one good lesson—viz, that profanity can be dispensed with for weeks at a time without making a man effeminate.

Some men believe that to abstain entirely from profanity will unsex them, but statistics show that this is an exploded theory. Since the churches have been thrown open to women many have been surprised to see what good has been done, and thousands of church debts contracted by men have been paid by women in a circuitous way [illegible] cooking up the husband's groceries and selling them to him at a tremendous advance. One oyster in a pan of milk under willing hands will do wonders.

Man thinks he has genius, but what man among you would ever think that he might make a beautiful patchwork quilt of his wife's dress and realize $250.30 by voting it to the most popular colored child in the state?

During the summer discussions have been going on upon two great questions —viz, (1) Which is the more beautiful, man or woman? and (2) Is woman honorable?

One would think that there could be no discussion on these points, and yet there has been a good deal, and it has been interesting without being abusive. Every one remembers old Mrs. Scraggs, who stood for an hour looking at the Apollo Belvidere, and then, after asking for the ninth time if it were really Apollo, said, with a sigh that raised the dust of antiquity in clouds, "Well, if that's the Apollo Belvidere, give me Scraggs!"

Beauty, especially in the opposite sex, is a local issue. Love is said to be blind, but the beauty he sees in some people does my heart good. There's nothing that so clearly proves the existence of an all wise, thoughtful God more than this. Where would I be today if love had not surrounded me with a glamour for which I would not take a good sized farm, with 80 head of stock on it?

Sandow, to the importer of Percheron draft horses and Rosa Bonheur Norman dray stallions, is beautiful. To me he is as beautiful as a locomotive that can make 90 miles an hour, but what well informed man would prefer him as a fellow tourist toward a better land to the scores of thousands of the angelic host which graduates every June in our own country alone?

When it comes to one sex criticising the other, it is like one blind asylum criticising the beauty of a rival asylum.

My own judgment, which on general topics is sought for every day by those who are strangers to me, would be entirely at fault in a matter of this kind, and yet I venture to give it with characteristic buoyancy and courage.

Man should lay no claim to beauty, for when he enters the contest and is conscious of it he becomes merely the silent partner of his clothes. He should be the trunk of the tree, not the foliage. He should be the energy that moves the panorama, but he should not be the panorama.

So far as honor is concerned in business, woman often saves man from dishonor. In her own dealings she may be more timid about the fulfillment of her contracts than man, but that is the fault of her education and environment to a certain degree. She may ask for margins and advantages in commercial transactions which man would hesitate to ask for, but that is because she has learned that she can do so. Women educated to business methods do not take advantage of this.

So far as honor between the two may be concerned in affairs of the heart, statistics do not aid us, but our own sex will do just as well to avoid an investigation.

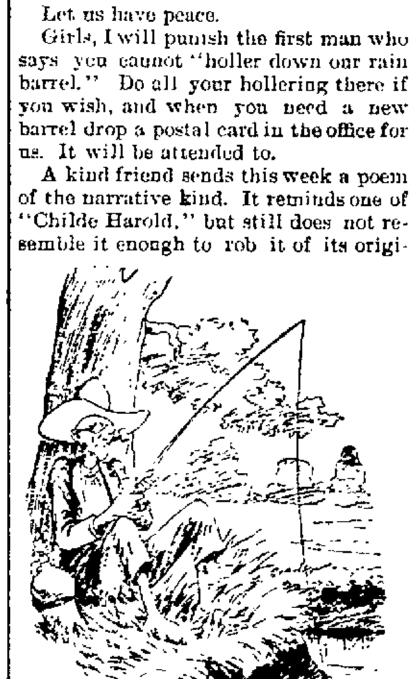
After all, however, anything that savors of savage and heartless discussion with the two arrayed against each other is wrong and dangerous. Man is the oak and woman the vine, and if the oak should prove to be decayed, and the vine turn out to be a poison ivy, humanity suffers and the divorce machine has to work a night shift.

Let us be friends.

Let us have peace.

Girls, I will punish the first man who says you cannot "holler down our rain barrel." Do all your hollering there if you wish, and when you need a new barrel drop a postal card in the office for us. It will be attended to.

A kind friend sends this week a poem of the narrative kind. It reminds one of "Childe Harold," but still does not resemble it enough to rob it of its originality. The poor distracted parents must realize, alas! that death is not the worst thing we have to contend against in North Carolina:



SEEKING FOR CATFISH.

On the second day of September,
In the eighteen hundred and ninety-third year,
A little child was born,
Its mother's heart to cheer.

This little child lived and grew
To be a prattling boy,
To run about the yard,
And give its parents joy.

But this was not long to be
For this darling child to thrive.
For soon the news was spread abroad
That Eli was no more alive.

'Twas in eighteen hundred and ninety-five,
On the third day of July,
That he, with two little brothers, wandered
To a creek that ran near by.

The little ones were all too small
The danger of it to know,
And soon this one was undressed,
In a-bathing to go.

But the water was much too deep,
And with chuck holes it abounded,
So right away they heard at the store
That little Eli was drownded.

The next day friends interred
The remains of this little boy
In a graveyard near his grandfather's
By the side of Mr. Malloy

Before closing I want to express my thanks and give due credit for a stanza used several weeks ago which should have had quotations added to it at least, though it was too good to be confused with my own work, which is almost exclusively in the prose line. It is a poetic definition of poetry and was written by that gifted young poet and reader, J. Edmund V. Cooke of Cleveland:

"To deftly do what many dimly think,
To fund a feeling for the world to borrow,
To turn a tear to printer's ink,
To make a sonnet of a sorrow."

PICTURES AND EYES.

How to Adjust the Latter to Properly Observe the Former.

The observer, in order to see a picture to the best advantage, must adjust his vision to that of the artist who produced it. Most of us do this instinctively. Not only do we select the best point of view from which to observe a picture, but we recede from the painting until the lights and colors blend in just the right degree. In addition to that many instinctively pinch the eyes together, producing thus a momentary astigmatism, such as the artist had produced in his own eye, and find the picture thus apparently improved.

A most useful appliance for viewing pictures is the so called stenopaic slit. This is merely a slit one or two millimeters in width in a card or thin plate of brass. Simple as this device is but few persons are aware of how much it adds to the effect in viewing paintings, as it allows the rays of light in only one meridian to pass through the cornea of the observer. If he wishes to look at a painting done by an artist whose vision is normal, or nearly so, the observer turns the slit around to correspond with the meridian of his own best vision. If, however, he looks at a picture in which it is desirable to have overlapping of the retinal images—at one where the colors must be mixed in the eye, for example—it is necessary to rotate the slit to another position, usually at right angles to the first, and with this a canvas which before showed too clearly the blotches of color now becomes blended into a much more perfect whole.

I would recommend this simple device to any one who has not already experimented with it. Thus, by adjusting our own personal equation of eyesight to that of the artist, we literally obtain his point of view. The colors are heightened, the daubs blend and new beauties appear. Instead of seeking, like our friend mentioned at first, for "the handiest way to get out of this 'ere place," we are glad to stay longer to study and to enjoy. Here, as everywhere, it is art and science together that yield the richest result. If science is allowed to be the interpreter, we may gain a heightened enjoyment of art and the artist a comforting increase of appreciation.—Lucien Howe, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

STAMBULOFF'S SPIRIT.

The late M. Stambuloff, ex-premier of Bulgaria, used to be called "the Bismarck of the Balkans." One of his most dramatic passages with Russia occurred during the war with Servia. Prince Alexander had gone out to lead the Bulgarian army in person, leaving M. Stambuloff in charge at home. It was a clear day, with not a breath of air stirring, and the roar of the cannon was plainly heard in the city. M. Stambuloff thought the Servians were winning the day. In their anxiety the Bulgarian ministers applied to the Russian diplomatic agent for advice. That gentleman shrugged his shoulders and said it was no affair of his.

"But," urged the Bulgarian ministers, "the Servians are almost at our gates. You could stop them with a single word, if you would." "Yes, but that word will not be spoken. On one condition only will I stop them, and that is that your beggar of a prince shall abdicate at once." "And that," thundered M. Stambuloff, "he will not do. No, not for 20 Russias!"

With that M. Stambuloff sprang into the saddle and dashed away to the battlefield, while the Russian agent sent to his friends to come to his house to celebrate the defeat of the Bulgarian armies. A few hours passed, and then the Bulgarian foreign minister got a telegram from M. Stambuloff, dated on the field of battle, telling of Prince Alexander's magnificent victory and of the utter rout of the Servians. He hurried with it to the house of the Russian agent, arriving there in the midst of the festivities. And when he told the news the representative of the czar, it is said, ground his teeth in rage.—Westminster Budget.

He Worked His Way Up.

The proprietor of a factory on the South Side has a son who has had about everything there was going—a college education, with a degree, all the fun to be had on a liberal allowance and a European tour. When he got back, he told his father he wanted to settle down and get "and son" on the signboard. The next morning the proprietor brought him to the foreman, saying, "Got anything for this young man to do?"

"Sorting scrap iron—$1 a day."

"All right. Put him at that. I want to give him a chance for the sake of his mother. If he's any good, he'll work up."

In two years the young man had worked up to be manager and junior partner, and the proprietor began to have his turn at a good time.

Why People Like Dogs.

And why do people keep such lots of dogs themselves and go in such numbers to see other people's dogs? Because the dog is at once the sincerest flatterer and the most successful cheerer that the human race ever had. A good dog always gives us the feeling that we men and women are a sort of gods. No other animal does anything of the kind. The cat treats us as an inferior, and the horse will treat us as a dear friend, not a divinity. The dog, moreover, imparts something of his peculiar gayety to us in a way that is irresistible. He mingles his suggestions of gayety with his flattery, for he not only leaves his dinner untasted to walk with us, but the mere fact that we are apparently giving ourselves the pleasure of a walk raises him into such a delirium of delight that the sight of it puts all our dumps and blues to such reproach that we shake them off in very shame. And when we don't walk, but sit moodily at home, the dog curls up lovingly at our feet and looks up now and then into our eyes and "glides into our darker musings with a mild and healing sympathy." Yes, there is a solid reason for the fondness of men for dogs, and it will never come to an end until either men or dogs become very different beings from what they are now.—Boston Transcript.

and those soon to become mothers, should know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its tortures, terrors and dangers to both mother and child, by aiding nature in preparing the system for parturition. Thereby "labor" and the period of confinement are greatly shortened. It also promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child.

MRS. DORA A. GUTHRIE, of Oakley, Overton Co., Tenn., writes: "When I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I was not able to stand on my feet without suffering almost death. Now I do all my housework, washing, cooking, sewing and everything for my family of eight. I am stouter now than I have been in six years. Your 'Favorite Prescription' is the best to take before confinement, or at least it proved so with me. I never suffered so little with any of my children as I did with my last."

An Adamless Kindergarten.

Some of the women of Allegan, Mich., have determined to have a kindergarten. The school directors would not establish one in connection with the public schools, so the women appealed to charity and secured enough money to hire a teacher and rent a room. The room was not nice enough to suit them, so they papered and painted it, and it is said they did their own carpenter work. There was not a man on the job. These are all new women.—Chicago Times-Herald.

EPHRAIM AND THE BEAR.

How He Killed a Yearling In a Fair Fight Without Weapons.

Old Ephraim Hatfield, father of Anse and Elias Hatfield, of McCoy-Hatfield feud notoriety, was a born fighter. He was also a mighty hunter, and had one ambition. It was to kill a yearling bear in a fair fight without any weapons other than those nature provided him with. Every day that he felt especially strong he would go out with his dogs and his boys, and, treeing a bear, would get him down and fight him. When bruin would begin to get the best of the encounter, he would call his boys to let loose the dogs. Year after year passed and Ephraim had not yet whipped a bear.

One day a fine yearling bear was treed, and as Cuffy was climbing to a place of safety old man Hatfield cut off a piece of the animal's tail with a quick blow of his knife, and the bear came down. Ephraim threw his gun and knives to the boys and cried out:

"He's a likely varmint. Stan aside, boys, an watch yo' dad. I'm comin, bar!" And he clutched the bear by the throat.

The animal got its paws around Ephraim, and they fought, rolling in every direction, until it was almost impossible to distinguish man from beast in the cloud. The boys held the dogs and encouraged the old man by shouting to him:

"Go it, pap! You've got 'em! Give it to 'im, dad!"

Down the hill the two rolled until they could roll no farther.

"Let loose the dogs!" shouted the old man. "Let 'em loose! The critter's got me!"

But the boys thought the old man would never have a better opportunity to realize his ambition and whip a yearling bear and kept the dogs away. Finally Ephraim, seeing that he was not to have assistance, began to use his feet and hands with an energy born of despair, and in half an hour he succeeded in choking the animal to death, but not until his clothes were torn to shreds and his face and body were covered with gaping wounds, from which the blood flowed so freely that it left a crimson trail wherever the man went. Dragging the carcass out of the pit Ephraim started after the boys, and it would have fared roughly with them, but they fled. The old man reached his home and was almost dead from loss of blood, but his ambition had been realized—he had whipped a yearling bear in a fair fight. The boys hid out in the woods for several days, and would not return until their father, whose joy at his success had got the better of his pain and anger, sent them word that he would not whip them if they returned. Hatfield never wearied telling how he whipped a yearling bear, and his sons are equally proud of their father's achievement.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

It's the fit of KLEINMAIERS' suits and overcoats that contributes most to their popularity. But when in addition he gets a fit that he didn't believe could be had in ready made clothes—then he's going to talk about it. There are a very great many people who take comfort in noting that there can be but two weeks more of the campaign. It is to the credit of the people that they will weary of a campaign. We get two much of it, especially when there are no more interesting issues than we have in Ohio this year.

If this social hubub over Hallowe'en keeps up and everybody engages to take in a social event, there won't be enough old fashioned Hallowe'en celebrants to carry off the old gates that need removal. Perhaps the social idea is the fin de seicle one.

It occurs to us that the campaign fuss made over the local indebtedness of Ohio is all ton foolery We have no hesitancy in recording that local indebtedness has gone to extravagant and dangerous proportions in some instances, but the state legislature is in no wise to blame. In Marion, for instance, our local indebtedness had an authorized increase of $100,000, but the legislature consented only on the grounds that the people voted for the debt. We should make a mighty big muss with the legislature that wouldn't authorize the increase under such conditions. We presume the experience of other cities is very similar except in the frantic boom towns. It is safe to say that every city desiring to increase its indebtedness, knew what it wanted. The bond issue business seems to have been dragged into the campaign without good reason, to be used chiefly as a scarecrow But this isn't a year for scarecrows of that kind

The Bondholders' Committee Make the Purchase for $1,500,500.

Special to the DAILY STAR.

BREMEN, O., Oct 19.—The sale of the Columbus, Shawnee and Hocking railroad occurred at this place this forenoon. The bondholders' committee made the purchase of the property for $1,500,500. There was no opposition to the sale today and no mysterious bidders.

It will be recalled that at the former sale of the road the price was run up on the representatives of the bondholders to $1,500,000, and that it was through technical irregularities of the bidding that run it up to this figure that furnished grounds for having the sale set aside and the property resold

The DeShong Dwelling Takes Fire and Is Slightly Damaged.

Special to DAILY STAR.

CALEDONIA, Oct. 19.—This village was awakened from peaceful slumber at 2:30 o'clock this morning by an alarm of fire. The dwelling house owned by J. B. DeShong and occupied by Mrs. Tena Hill was ablaze, the fire originating in the second story, but by the prompt work of the department was soon under control, $50 covering the damage.

The funeral of Mrs William Weir, of Latimberville, was held at the M. E. church and was largely attended. Burial occurred at the Caledonia cemetery.

POLITICAL PICKUPS

Dr. J. T. Hensley, candidate for representative, participated in the republican meeting at Mt. Gilead Friday, which was addressed by ex-Governor Foraker and Gen. Asa Jones. Dr Hensley also addressed the big audience briefly and "was well received," says the Ohio State Journal's report of the meeting

Republicans will have a German speaker from Cincinnati here before the campaign closes. His services will be utilized in Richland and Pleasant townships.

Hon John B Peaslee, democratic candidate for lieutenant governor addressed a good big audience at the township hall, in Richland, last evening. Mr. Peaslee spoke in both English and German. The meeting is said to have been one of the most enthusiastic that has been held in Richland township for many years, the candidate for lieutenant governor undoubtedly being the attraction.

HON. JOHN B. PEASLEE.

About a dozen Marion Democrats accompanied the speaker, and among those who addressed the Richland democracy were B. G. Young, W. E. Scofield and D. R. Crissinger, who urged upon the audience the matter of organization to look after the interests of the party during the remainder of the campaign.

Mr. Peaslee was accompanied to LaRue yesterday, where he was introduced to the crowds in attendance at the fair. He left this morning for Sidney.

Chairman Dickerson of the republican central committee, knows a good thing in the way of a cartoon when he sees it. The already famous bicycle cartoon has had a liberal distribution on the walls of republican headquarters, and Mr. Dickerson got hold of another yesterday that is a "corker" It represents Bushnell tearing a Campbell mask from the face of Brice, and is quite fetching from a republican standpoint.

The democracy has but one meeting dated in this county at the present time. That is for LaRue, next Friday, the 25th inst. Dr. J. A. Norton and W. E. Scofield are the spell-binders announced for that occasion.

The Marion Bushnell club will have a position in the first division of the big parade at Columbus tonight.

Hon. Asa Gardner visited the LaRue street fair yesterday.

Republicans are expecting the McKinley meeting at LaRue next Wednesday to be a big affair, and the governor is sure to get a rousing reception when he comes here in the evening of that day.

The republican county executive and central committees held a meeting at headquarters this afternoon.

AT ST. PAUL'S CHURCH.

Rev. Wm. Lucas Met His Friends Friday Night.

At St. Paul's Episcopal church, Friday night, a special meeting was held in honor of the visit here of Rev. William Lucas, now of Alegan, Mich., but formerly rector of St. Paul's.

Rev. Lucas preached a short but eloquent sermon, after which some time was spent by the audience and the old Marion pastor in a social way.

During his pastorate here Rev Lucas made many warm personal friends and they were all most eager Friday night to pay to him their respects.

HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS CONTEMPLATE OXFORD GOWNS

And Mortar Boards—They Will Only Be Worn When They Meet as a Class, and Pretty Graduating Gowns Will Still Have a Chance—Other School News.

The senior class of the Marion High school is beginning the year with much arduous labor and enthusiasm. The class numbers sixteen members, thirteen of whom are young ladies and three gentlemen. The senior organization has chosen Miss Florence Aye president, Miss Emma Lawrence vice president, and Miss Dale Aye secretary and treasurer. The motto chosen is "Aim to succeed." The colors of the class will remain the same, scarlet and cream.

The principal matter now under discussion is Oxford gowns and mortar boards. This sounds rather English, and will look the same if the class adopts them. This, however, will not make the class members look sombre on the night they graduate, for they intend to discard the dark gowns at that time, and give the bewitching graduating dress a chance They will simply wear the gowns and capes through the year when they meet as a class, but when it comes to graduating it will be different. The opportunity for the pretty dresses will not be lost

It is a pleasant thing to hear the colored men working on the concrete on Prospect street sing. Every noon they strike up some old southern melody that causes passersby to stop and listen Several of the negroes have fine voices.

A few of the baseball enthusiasts are already talking about a club for Marion next year. If somebody would furnish a park a ball club could be organized here that would pay, but for an individual company to put in a club, it would be pretty tough picking to get enough out of it to pay the players.

The Columbia band is talking of getting an interest in Germania Park hall for the winter, and opening up a rink there. If they secure it, the rink will be managed by Henry Poock, formerly manager of the Columbia rink, and a fine restaurant will be added.

One week from next Thursday is Holloween, and already the youngsters are preparing for the event.

The Columbus theatres will be well patronized by Marion people this evening. The amusements afforded by the Columbus houses attracted many today to the excursion.

Operator Robinson, of the Western Union Telegraph company, has probably had as much experience "roughing it" as any one in the city. Mr. Robinson is an orphan and only attended school three months. He could hardly read and write when he first commenced working for the Western Union as a messenger boy in Indianapolis, but he was an apt fellow and soon picked up a great deal of knowledge, and while now only 21 years of age is a first-class operator, a clever little gentleman and has made a host of friends in Marion.

IN COMMON PLEAS.

Foreclosure Proceedings Begun—Judge Norris Held Court Today.

Magdaline Biggerstaff, by her attorney, John A. Wolford, filed in the court of common pleas, this morning, her petition in foreclosure against Elmira O. Johnston, widow of Lobeis L. Johnston, Margaret Jane Johnston, a minor of the age of seven years, and Hugh Wilson Johnston, a minor of the age of three years.

In her petition the plaintiff sets up that the said defendant, Elmira O Johnson and her husband, L. L. Johnston, then in full life but since deceased, executed and delivered to her a conditional conveyance for the south half of the west half of the northwest quarter of section 20, township 6 south range 15 east, containing 40 acres in Pleasant township, Marion county Ohio

That said conveyance was made to secure the payment of two notes both dated May 1, 1891, one for $200 due two years after date and one for $300 due three years after date that said mortgage was duly recorded, that said notes were due and unpaid and there is due thereon the sum of $500 with interest from May 1, 1895.

After setting up the death of L. L. Johnston and the fact that Elmira O Johnston is his widow and the other defendants his heirs, the petition prays for the sale of the mortgaged premises and the payment of said mortgage indebtedness.

It will be remembered that the deceased, L. L. Johnston, was the man killed the past summer in the cave-in at the gravel pit at Owens

Judge Norris held court in the sheriff's office this afternoon and disposition was made of several cases.

The case of Feaster against Reece was submitted to the court without argument the only contention being over the endeavor of L. B Anthony to recover, on a judgment against Mary Wolfe in June subsequent to the time at which she sold the property The deed in question was not recorded for the reason that it could not be transferred

In the case of Nash against the trustees of Bowling Green township the judgment of the probate court was affirmed, to which judgment the plaintiff excepted.

F E Guthery and Marshall Markey, administrators, were substituted in place of defendant, John Markey, in the case of Albright against Ludwig and others, with leave to file an answer and cross petition instanter.

The divorce case of Campbell against Campbell was dismissed at the cost of plaintiff and the case of the State of Ohio on complaint of Florence Dean against George Fox was also dismissed

FINDS WALKING GOOD

...N A TRAMP FROM LONDON AROUND THE WORLD

William Ford, the English Newspaper Correspondent Strikes Marion, Bound Homeward—He Dines With Mayor Nichols—Incidents of His Journey.

William Ford, who has probably walked father than any living man was in the city Friday afternoon, while on his way to London, England, via New York.

Ford is a London newspaper correspondent, was in this country two years ago, and was at Massillon at the time Coxey started out with his army of the commonweal He returned to England and on a five thousand dollar wager agreed to walk around the world and back to England in eighteen months, but was not to ride or take funds with him, although he had the privilege of begging all that he could He started a year ago last August and expects to make it very easily At each place he visits he gets a letter from the mayor, city and county official, and while here was entertained by Mayor Nichols.

On his way from the Pacific coast he walked over the Pacific railway, passed along the slope into Mexico, through Texas and into Colorado, then almost directly through this section of the country. At Indianapolis he took dinner with Governor Matthews and has a letter from him, and also from nearly all the governors of the states he has passed through. Of the men of prominence that he has met in this country he has great respect for McKinley and carries a letter from him with the official seal of the state of Ohio on it.

The most novel thing that Ford had in his possession was a case of railroad passes They are all tie passes, and are issued to him at the end of each division by the railroad superintendents It was stipulated in the articles of the wager that he was to secure a tie pass over each road he passed, and he has a large number of such passes in his possession that have been tendered him from the various roads over the United States

Since he started out on his tour Ford has been robbed four times of everything that he had of value, and was obliged to start out again in destitute circumstances, as he first started from England on August 14, 1894. He struck the United States at Sanfrancisco and has been making good time since then, and is now in splendid health He is dressed for the trip, wearing a suit of stout cloth with heavy shoes and leggings. He expects to get to New York in thirty days, and then cross to England, and he has a walk of one hundred and sixty-five miles after he crosses the other side of the Atlantic ere he has won his wager. He left Friday evening for Galion, and will go from there to Cleveland

ELECTRIC HEADLIGHTS

Being Put on the Electric Cars—The New Car Here

The Electric Street Railway company is getting ready for winter and putting its rolling stock into first class shape

Closed car No 6 was run into the barn Friday and today is being wired, and so it will soon be possible to resume the six car service without using the open cars which will be stabled for the winter

Car No 3 has been in the barn the greater part of the week, the trucks have been painted red, the entire car cleaned up and varnished, the stove put in and an electric headlight placed on each end, so that we may expect to see the electric headlights in operation next week.

It is the intention to rig up all the six closed cars just like No. 3, which will be a great improvement in the appearance of the cars and also be of great convenience to the motormen.

A CANDIDATE ROBBED

He was afterwards released and last night was given a hearing. He plead guilty to the charge and threw himself on the mercy of the court. Major Adams has not as yet rendered a decision in the matter

THE WATER TANK

At the Hocking Valley Destroyed by Fire This Morning.

The fire department was called out about 10:30 o'clock this morning to extinguish a blaze at the water tank of the Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo railway.

All the departments responded to the alarm and the Steam Shovel boys ran a line of hose up the Hocking Valley tracks almost to Silver street, where the hose gave out

The Central department reached the fire but as there was no hydrant in that vicinity the hose could not be used and the department had to fall back upon the chemical engine, hand chemicals and buckets.

The engine house itself was saved but the tank is a total loss, the fire having acquired too much headway before it could be reached. At the time the fire laddies reached the tank it was a mass of flames and do what they would the flames, fanned by a brisk breeze, could not be overcome As a result the tank was burned down to the surface of the water which, it is stated, stood at a depth of nine feet in the tank.

The loss to the company will be in the neighborhood of $400 but it will not seriously interfere with its business here as the engines have been using hydrant water for some time.

A DEN OF RATTLERS

Col. R. J. Diegle's Household Pets Consist of a Box of Snakes.

Col. R. J. Diegle has a number of pets at his residence that are apt to make the chills come to one who is the least bit nervous. The pets consist of nothing more or less than a large den of rattlers. There are twelve snakes in all, and the most of them are rattlesnakes of the species that are found in Texas and commonly known as diamond back rattlers, the most ferocious and poisonous snake in existence He also has the Texas moccasins but they are not dangerous.

The rattlers, however, have to be handled with care even by such experienced persons as the Diegles, and the minute the den is opened the warning rattle is heard, and in another moment the snake makes the dart Friday afternoon Mr. Diegle exhibited the snakes to a number of friends, and while they were in the most enraged state, little Patrice took them from their den and deftly handled them with the utmost skill and without harm to herself. The exhibition was a novel one, as the snake was a large one and was so enraged that it seemed no one could touch it

Celebrated Their Wedding Anniversary.

CRIME OF A MINISTER.

The Sensational Case Just Tried at Danville, Ind.

CONVICTED OF WIFE MURDER.

A Cleverly Concocted Story of Burglary and Murder Falls to Pieces. Self Inflicted Wounds. No Motive Proved. Imprisonment For Life.

A very remarkable murder case was brought to a close at Danville, Ind., when a jury returned a verdict of guilty in the second degree against Rev. William E. Hinshaw and fixed his punishment at imprisonment for life. Hinshaw was convicted of the murder of his wife, and the case is remarkable for the apparent absence of any motive for the crime, as well as the high standing of the parties.

The murderer is a tall, athletic young man. His wife is said to have possessed grace, youth, beauty, vivacity of temperament, and all the endowments to make a man happy. They owned a farm of 144 acres and some money and occupied their own house at Bellville, a short distance from Danville. They were highly respected and Hinshaw was the ordained minister of a Methodist church, to which he had been called by the petition of the congregation on account of the popularity of both himself and wife. Their outward home life was most exemplary, and no motive could be conceived for the crime.

For a considerable time after Mrs. Hinshaw's death there was no suspicion resting upon her husband. The funeral was attended by hundreds of people living in the neighborhood, and the sermon was preached by a retired minister living in close proximity to the Hinshaws, in which the young pastor was made the object of deep commiseration and expressions of condolence and sympathy.

The story of the crime is this. Some time last January Hinshaw began to conduct a series of protracted meetings at the different churches in his circuit. He had finished the meeting at Stilesville and was preparing to go to another place. He and his wife drove to their home in Bellville one night. There is a dispute as to what occurred on that trip home, but as Hinshaw is the only living witness his statement must be accepted. He denies having any quarrel with his wife. They got home about 10 o'clock. Mrs. Hinshaw went into the house through the back door, and he put his horse in the stable and then went into the house. He and his wife talked until about 11 o'clock. The subject of their conversation, according to the statement of some of his friends, was the family troubles of her parents. Her mother wanted to come and live with her, and so did the father. Hinshaw, according to the story he told, was willing that the mother should make her home with his wife, but objected to the father.

About 2 o'clock in the morning, according to the testimony of Mr. Hinshaw before the coroner, he was awakened from a sound sleep by a pistol shot, and at the same time he said he heard his wife moan, and then say that she was shot. The cry of his wife and the report of the pistol were simultaneous. His trousers were hanging on the headboard of the bed. When he was awakened, he saw two men in the room. One was tall and slender. The other was shorter and heavier. As he sprang from the bed there was another shot. In less time than it takes to record it Hinshaw was grappling with one of the assailants. His wife must have grappled with the other, but of this he claims to know nothing, for he was busy with the robber. In the struggle his wife got hold of him and said, "Is this you, Will?" Hinshaw had a desperate struggle with the robber. They fought in two or three rooms, out of the back door, across the street to a spot near the barn of Samuel Tincher. Hinshaw was shot and stabbed and lost so much blood that he was compelled to release the man he had hold of, and the two got away. Hinshaw fell in the road near Tincher's house, but got to his feet and staggered down the street past his own house toward the office of Dr. Strong, but he could not make it and again fell in the road, where he was found by some of the neighbors and carried to his house.

The story is seemingly a plausible one in every detail. Had Hinshaw been a man of discretion he would doubtless now be free. The principle of the "perverse," however, operated in his case, as in the case of so many men who are shrewd in covering up the tracks of their crime, and his own conduct soon led to gossip among the villagers which connected his name with the murder. The first act leading to mischievous reports was the freedom of the young pastor's intercourse with a number of girls and his remarkably speedy recovery from the shock of his wife's death. This revived rumors of something approaching a scandal in which he had been engaged before the tragedy.

REV. WILLIAM E. HINSHAW

During Mrs. Hinshaw's absence from home on a visit to friends the pastor was confined to his home with illness. A small girl waited on him. This child was sent away by Hinshaw and told to go to his neighbor Tincher, while he received the care of a young woman with whom he had been seen driving in a buggy some time before. Mrs. Tincher was inclined to treat the matter in an angry spirit, but was restrained by her husband, who requested her not to speak of the occurrence because Hinshaw was their pastor and they owed it to the good name of their church to remain silent. Enemies sprang up, who began to pry with curious interest into the minister's home affairs. It developed that Hinshaw had been told a short time previous to the tragedy—perhaps the night before—that he ought not to allow his wife to visit a certain house, on the ground that there was a young man there. Hinshaw laughed at this story, but in private is said to have reproached her with it and said some harsh words. One point of interest in connection with his life developed [illegible], and as the feeling grew detectives took up the case, stimulated by the reward offered for the arrest of the murderers.

One of the detectives arrested the minister. By advice of his attorneys Hinshaw demanded an immediate hearing. The detective was unable to bring proof and the prisoner was discharged. This aroused the resentment of his friends and the detectives were compelled to leave the neighborhood to [illegible] bodily [illegible]. The examination was held before the coroner and here certain statements were made by Hinshaw that were afterward effectively used to weave the web of guilt around him. Hinshaw was jubilant at his acquittal, and assumed an air of braggadocio. This fired the spirit of many who thought such an atrocious offense should not go unpunished. In Danville suspicion of his guilt was strong, but his church stood nobly by him.

MRS. HINSHAW

The case was investigated by the grand jury, and Hinshaw came from Bellville to Danville and used his personal influence almost under the eyes of the jury—certainly within the walls of the courthouse—to dissuade witnesses from testifying in the case. The investigation resulted in the finding of a true bill, and in May the preacher was arrested and sent to jail to await trial.

Taken in connection with his behavior and interested action throughout, the state had a strong case of circumstantial evidence. There had been a light fall of snow on the night of the murder. Accepting Hinshaw's story of the robbery, parties had been organized with the first break of dawn to trace the two men who had made the assault on the preacher and his wife. The first baffling evidence presenting itself was the utter absence of any tracks in the snow which would indicate the direction taken by the assassins. A young girl in a neighbor's house had heard the pistol shots and within a few moments of the reports looked out of the window. She saw one man. He was just rising to his feet in the road, and this man proved to be Hinshaw. She had seen no trace of the burglars.

Another damning circumstance in the story told by the pastor was that his wife had spoken to him while he was struggling with the robber. She had asked him, "Is that you, Will?" which supposes a person in a rational state of mind. Yet the bullet hole in Mrs. Hinshaw's brain was an inch in diameter, which would have rendered it impossible for her to speak sensibly, to assist in fighting the burglars and to lock the doors. Hinshaw, moreover, stated that he and his wife had gone to bed and she was lying on her pillow. He testified that she never wore a nightgown in bed, but merely a skirt. When found on the back doorstep, the body of Mrs. Hinshaw was not dressed for bed, and her nightgown was found in a closet near the bedstead. In addition to these material and incriminating points of evidence there was strong evidence of perhaps a minor interest, but hardly the less convincing in its tendency to confirm what already was the property of the state's attorneys—the fact that the bullet which ended Mrs. Hinshaw's life had been fired while she lay in bed, its range proving circumstantially, if not conclusively, that the revolver must have been held between them, as they both occupied the bed.

Sifted down, the evidence as conclusively as direct evidence could have done, fastened circumstantially upon the Rev. Mr. Hinshaw the guilt of his wife's murder and proved that his wounds had been self inflicted. The theory upon which the state proceeded was that Hinshaw murdered his wife in a passionate quarrel, that he shot her while she was in bed and carried the body to the doorstep, where it was found, or that they were having a struggle and he killed her while she was trying to escape from him. Several reasons are given. One that she had upbraided him for intrigues in which he was engaged, that he wanted to get rid of her that he might marry some one else, and that there was some property involved that would benefit him if she was out of the way.

Whatever the motive, the verdict of the jury finding him guilty and assessing his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for life, rendered after a short absence from the courtroom, was generally hailed with satisfaction.

Caressed by a Copperhead.

Mr. Thomas Calvert, a dairyman of Portsmouth, O., was taking an afternoon nap on the sofa in his sitting room, from which he was awakened by a soft touch on his hand, which was hanging over the side of the sofa. He glanced down, and, to his horror, saw a thick, ugly snake which he at once recognized as the deadly copperhead. Its head was elevated, and seemed caressing his hand. It would run its cold nose up and down the fingers, causing a sensation which brought the perspiration out in great beads on Calvert's forehead. Then it would dart its tongue out and lick the hand like a dog. Mr. Calvert was [illegible] for what seemed to be hours, fearing almost to breathe lest he [illegible] it should stick its fangs into the hand which it seemed now to caress with such a loving touch. He seized the copperhead [illegible] and shook the life out of it.

THE SWEET PEA GIRL.

Mysterious Woman of the Durrant Murder Trial.

A SAN FRANCISCO SENSATION.

The Sweet Pea Girl Talks of Her Interest In the Case. Pestered by the Press and the Public Because of Her Regular Attendance at the Trial.

One of the most interesting features of the Durrant murder trial at San Francisco has been the regular attendance of a beautiful young woman who always wore a bunch of sweet peas and manifested great interest in the prisoner. Her striking beauty soon attracted the attention of the reporters and court officers and numerous attempts to penetrate the mystery of her identity having failed, the newspaper men made her famous in the public prints as "the sweet pea girl of the Durrant trial." All sorts of rumors concerning her connection with the case were circulated and the populace flocked to the courtroom to see the sweet pea girl, whose entrances and exits created quite as much of a sensation as those of the man charged with the belfry murders.

It finally transpired that the sweet pea girl is Mrs. C. J. Bowers, the wife of an Oakland insurance clerk, and although the mystery that surrounded her identity was dissipated the public refused to believe that she did not have some secret connection with the case, and she continued to divide with the prisoner the curious attention of the crowds at the murder trial. "Annie Laurie," one of the bright young women of the San Francisco Examiner staff, had a talk with Mrs. Bowers at her boarding house the other day that gives an entertaining insight into the character of that famous personage.

"Law me!" said the sweet pea girl, catching her breath and showing a dimple or two. "Will you please to tell me what they're following me and pestering me for?

THE SWEET PEA GIRL.

I never done a thing, not a thing. I went to the Durrant trial like lots of other ladies went. Yes, I carried a bunch of flowers, because I always carry flowers. I certainly do love flowers.

"About the case? Oh, yes. Why, I went to the case with my lady friends. We wanted to see Durrant and see what he'd look like in a courtroom. I don't see anything so very terrible about that, do you?

"What did he look like?

"Why," said the sweet pea girl, "just about like anybody else would look. I can't see no great difference between him and any other young gentleman.

"I saw him once before, you know."

"How was that?" I said.

"Oh, yes indeed," replied the sweet pea girl. "Yes, indeed. I saw him on the boat the day he was arrested. So, of course, you understand, I took a considerable interest in him. I mean only as a stranger, you understand, of course.

"I'm very quiet. I've always been very quiet. I'm not much of a hand to talk or to go either. I don't care to go. I like to stay home. I'm great for staying in my room by myself. I read a good deal, and I have my birds for company. I certainly do love birds, don't you?

"What do I read? Oh, heaps of things—stories mostly and poetry and books of science—but law me, I haven't read anything for weeks. I'm so pestered about this Durrant case I can't get my mind down to read.

"I'm studying music too—instrumental. I'm very fond of music, but I can't study now. I just worry and worry, and then I call in my lady friend and we both have a good cry. I always feel better when I can have a good cry, don't you? Seems like I don't fret so if I cry."

"How do they pester you?" I asked.

"Well, you just think! Reporters after me and detectives, and I can't eat in the dining room any more—people stare so. I have all my meals sent to my room. It's kind of lonesome, but it's the best way.

"Why, you'd think I was some sort of wild animal eloped from the circus, to see people stare at me—men and women too. I can't go out in the cars any more. I have to get a carriage when I want a little fresh air. Ain't it awful for folks to do so?

"I certainly do think it's a burning shame. I don't know no more about the Durrant case than the dead, except what I've seen in the courtroom and read in the papers. I [illegible] reader. I read every [illegible] every line. My [illegible] the best [illegible] but I like to [illegible] theater or any [illegible] I don't want [illegible]

THE ANANIAS CLUB

Stories Told by Disciples of the Famous Prevaricator.

One of the latest products of the restless Tenderloin district of New York is an Ananias club. To join the club a candidate must be an ingenious liar. Tales of travel, scientific discoveries and stories of historical research predominate. The club has had a leather medal struck off, which was presented to the champion liar. The medal bears on its face a stamped reproduction of Ananias' features.

Some of the stories told are worth repeating. At a recent session the man who wore the medal told this story:

"Some time ago I was traveling in South America. I stopped at a hotel in one of the inland cities, and as I wanted to rise early I asked the landlord to have me wakened at 6 o'clock in the morning. I asked him if he had an alarm clock. He startled me by saying that he had not, but that he had a lot of rattlesnakes trained to wake people. All you had to do was to lie down and at the designated hour the snake let loose his rattle and kept it up until you wakened. It struck me as an odd arrangement, but I said that if it was all right I would stand it. Accordingly he put a snake in my room, and after the newness of the thing wore off I fell asleep. I was awakened about 3 o'clock by a great racket in the room. Through the dim light I could make out a struggle that was taking place in the room, but I could only discern one man. When I made the situation out clearly I found that a native thief had entered my room. The snake had immediately coiled itself around his throat and was slowly strangling him while it violently rang its rattle for the police."

A dead silence settled over the little group. None but a brave man would have ventured to open his mouth after that. There was one, however, that did dare, and his narrative was as follows:

"Two years ago, when I visited my home on the farm in Vermont, I dropped my gold watch and chain on the grass. Before I had time to pick it up a calf playing in the yard licked it up and swallowed it. Last week I was home again, and the calf, now grown to a cow, was to be killed. I had a grudge against it for the loss of my handsome gold watch and went out to see the execution. In cutting up the cow, after the killing, the watch was found. Imagine my surprise when I found that it was perfectly intact, running all right and correct within a few seconds. An investigation revealed the fact that in swallowing the watch the animal had allowed it to become fastened between its lungs. It was so fixed that each time the animal breathed, the watch being a stem winder, the knob got a twist and this kept it continually wound, while the natural grease from the animal kept it well oiled and preserved."

There was another dead silence. Then slowly the judge unpinned the medal from his breast and without a word handed it to the last speaker.

A Pair of New Women.

As Miss Ella Jones was riding on her bicycle along South Broad street in Trenton one night recently she saw a girl struggling with a burly man. "Here, you fellow," shouted Miss Jones, "you let that girl alone and go about your business." The man sneaked off in the dark. Miss Jones led the girl, Mary Malloy, to a safe place. Then she told the police, who arrested Thomas Patterson as Mary's assailant.

As the steamer Richard Peck, from New York, drew into her slip at New Haven the other night a man fell overboard. For a moment none of the crowd that rushed to the rail offered assistance. Then a young woman slipped off her skirt and, clad in bloomers, jumped after the struggling man and helped him ashore. The woman was Dorothy Chester, the English actress who was arrested in New York for riding astride a horse in Central park. The man she rescued was George H. Boswell, a miner, from San Francisco. When seen, Miss Chester said: "Oh, it was nothing. If I saved the man's life, the thanks belong to my bloomers."

A Cure For Slander.

In Poland it was once the custom to sentence backbiters to go on all fours and bark like a dog for the space of a quarter of an hour. This mode of punishment was introduced during the reign of Charles V, but it was soon abolished, as it had to be applied so frequently that his majesty's rest was disturbed, for the barking went on all the forenoon while the courts were sitting.

Venturesome Italian Gamins.

The Italian gamin is as adventurous as his American cousin. After the eruptions of Vesuvius and while the lava was still smoking hot, scores of small boys from Naples climbed the mountain to the very edge of the crater and pelted each other with chunks of the steaming lava.

SCANDAL IN THE ARMY

The Assault Upon Colonel Crofton Creates a Sensation.

A FORMER ATTACK UPON HIM.

Lieutenant Walsh Once Slapped the Face of the Officer Lieutenant Pague Fired On—The Maney-Hedberg Tragedy—Bad Blood In the Fifteenth Regiment.

The excitement in military circles caused by the recent shooting at Colonel R. E. A. Crofton, commandant at Fort Sheridan, Ills., by Lieutenant Samuel S. Pague has not subsided and the incident is believed to have special significance on account of similar evidences of insubordination exhibited at Fort Sheridan within the past few years.

COLONEL R. E. A. CROFTON

The Fifteenth infantry is noted for the scandals and affrays it has developed since its arrival at this post. Two years ago Lieutenant Maney shot and killed Captain Hedberg. The men had made threats against each other, and meeting at the cavalry barracks Maney drew his revolver and shot Hedberg down. Hedberg was unarmed. Maney was tried in the United States court and escaped on a showing that Hedberg was advancing to assault and had previously threatened to kill him.

On Aug. 26, 1894, Lieutenant Blanton C. Walsh entered Colonel Crofton's tent during field maneuvers and struck the colonel a violent blow in the face. Walsh walked away and dared the colonel to bring him before a court martial. The lieutenant never told why he struck Colonel Crofton, but he did say that if court martialed he would be acquitted. The blow almost knocked the colonel down. Walsh was arrested, but nothing was ever done. Colonel Crofton said he believed Lieutenant Walsh was suffering from mental trouble at the time. A board of medical officers was appointed and in order to settle the affair they gave it as their opinion that Lieutenant Walsh was not responsible at the time of the assault and recommended that he be placed in the care of physicians.

Both Crofton and Walsh were on duty at Buford before coming here and while at that post they had trouble on the parade ground. Lieutenant Walsh denounced Crofton in the presence of a number of officers. Walsh was a friend of Mrs. Hedberg, and this tended to bring about trouble. The only explanation Walsh would make was that any man with self respect would do just what he had done.

Colonel R. E. A. Crofton was born in Ireland. He entered the United States army in 1861 as captain in the Sixteenth infantry, being appointed from Delaware. His promotion has been regular, and he bears an honorable record for bravery as an officer and excellent service as a soldier.

From captain he was promoted in 1866 to the position of major of the Fourteenth infantry, and in 1879 he was made a lieutenant colonel and attached to the Thirteenth infantry. He was promoted major by brevet for gallantry at the battle of Shiloh, and a year later was distinguished by being breveted lieutenant colonel for brave conduct on the field of Chickamauga and at Missionary Ridge.

Early in the first day's battle of Stone River Captain Crofton took command of the First battalion of the Sixteenth infantry. His regiment after the war was sent west and remained in New Mexico a little over 12 years. He was transferred to the Seventeenth infantry in March [illegible] and was afterward made colonel of the Fifteenth infantry, which regiment he has commanded ever since. He has a gallant record in the war. He is a widower, about 55 years of age.

Strange Adventure of a Bullet.

The Livingston (Ala.) Sun says that a negro living near York, Ala., was shooting rats recently with a cap and ball pistol and the cap snapped and the charge failed to explode. The negro turned the pistol upward and looked down the barrel to see what was the matter, when the weapon went off and the bullet struck him squarely between the eyes. The bullet fell to the floor flattened out, and the negro was only hurt to the extent of an inconsiderable flesh wound.

The Blue Gum's Bite.

A blue gum negro bit another man on the finger at Cordele, Ga., recently. The injured member began swelling at once, and in a few days amputation was necessary to save the man's life. The bite of a blue gum negro is considered by many almost as poisonous as that of a rattlesnake.

CHICKAMAUGA DAYS.

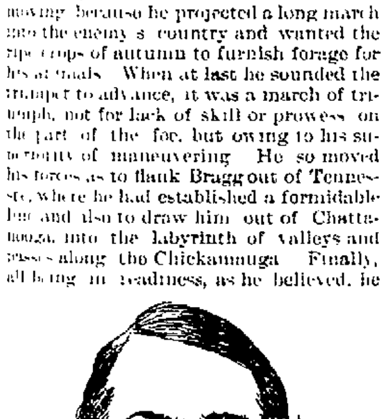
ORY BATTLE RECALLED BY THE PARK CEREMONIES.

t of a Brilliant Campaign Planned by the Union Leader—Accidents Which Changed All—Lytle's Heroic Death. ger's Charge—How Helm Died.

ht, 1895, by American Press Association. Book rights reserved.]

ROSECRANS' veterans and their antagonists celebrate this year the anniversary of a great battle by dedicating the Chickamauga and Chattanooga Military park Sept. 19 and 20. In point of results the contest at Chickamauga was a [illegible]. It decided nothing and that was [illegible] of the Union leader Rosecrans—[illegible] drawn battle could leave him no worse off than before, while it would be a [illegible] opponent, Bragg. Bragg had [illegible] win, but he needed positive victory to give him anything. The Confederates, however, slept on the battlefield, which, as things go in war, was game for [illegible]. It would be a ghastly joke to say that most of them slept there because they could not crawl away, but it is a fact that they won the doubtful privilege only by suffering enormous loss. On no other field [illegible] did they face such frightful carnage. More than 16,000 men in gray went down in the two days' fighting. Bragg outgeneraled Rosecrans when he compelled him to fight at a disadvantage and against odds, but Rosecrans outgeneraled Bragg by getting between him and his base, where he could look calmly on during the struggle with the confident feeling that "whichever way this goes is my gain." Bragg won in tactics, won in fighting, won the field, but all this simply resulted in giving to Rosecrans the objective of his campaign. What it was all about was the [illegible] of Chattanooga, a stronghold by nature and the gateway to Tennessee and northern Georgia, which, falling into Union power, would crown the victories of New Orleans and Vicksburg. Chattanooga was the prize, and Rosecrans seized and held it. And he accomplished all by one of the most brilliant military maneuvers of the war, a successful maneuver, the brilliancy of which was not dimmed by the disasters in fighting to carry it through.

At Chickamauga, for once, the Confederates had the most men, hence were able to overwhelm the Union army. The boys in blue fought hard to stave off annihilation, but they did it and reaped a double reward. It was not simply their old enemy of the west that they had to contend with. Longstreet's corps from the Army of Northern Virginia was thrown in at the crisis of the battle to turn the tide. Many and marvelous the deeds, many and valorous the heroes which the day brought forth. The fame of Rosecrans has been beclouded in spite of the genius displayed throughout that campaign because in the eyes of some of his superiors he was slow in setting about it. While Grant was hammering at Vicksburg with Johnston at his back Rosecrans played with Bragg in Tennessee so that he would not detach troops to re-enforce Johnston in falling upon Grant's rear. Whether or not the plan was sound from a military point of view it succeeded. Grant had enough to do in front without an enemy in the rear, and Rosecrans saw to it that that enemy in the rear was kept harmless. After Vicksburg he took his own time about moving because he projected a long march into the enemy's country and wanted the ripe crops of autumn to furnish forage for his animals. When at last he sounded the trumpet to advance, it was a march of triumph, not for lack of skill or prowess on the part of the foe, but owing to his superiority of maneuvering. He so moved his forces as to flank Bragg out of Tennessee, where he had established a formidable line and also to draw him out of Chattanooga, into the labyrinth of valleys and passes along the Chickamauga. Finally, all being in readiness, as he believed, he drew his army in front of Chattanooga [illegible] Bragg to recover his ground. Unfortunately McCook's corps met with [illegible] and did not reach the field of [illegible] as soon by a day as Rosecrans had [illegible]. Still his lines were safe, his strategical victory won, as things stood, but a night changed all. Longstreet, a new, unheard of enemy, reached Bragg's camps with 11,000 fresh men, uniting there with 4,000 under Breckinridge, also [illegible] and forming an enthusiastic phalanx [illegible] strong.



GENERAL LYTLE

The struggle of the first day, Sept. 19, was a fight for positions. The Confederates lost heavily and gained but little, although [illegible] was at a serious disadvantage in [illegible] having the corps of McCook well in [illegible] had closed in upon the main body [illegible] held the roads covering Chattanooga, and Thomas was in position on the [illegible] ing the road to Rossville, in front of Chattanooga. The 20th dawned with a [illegible] over the battlefield. The corps [illegible] had ordered to assault Thomas [illegible] failed to be on hand, and he [illegible] Thomas' right flank and [illegible] of the main line detached divi[illegible] and brigades. The fighting was desperate and had it been successful would [illegible] Rosecrans' army in two, separating [illegible] left wing under Thomas from the [illegible] ing under McCook. Everywhere [illegible] held their ground, and Rosecrans [illegible] ing Bragg's purpose to annihilate Thomas, gave orders to McCook to [illegible] gradually to the left and relieve [illegible] division in the center, en[illegible] general to send off troops to [illegible]. There was nothing else to do but [illegible] the line, close it up upon the [illegible] Thomas battle the battle of [illegible]. But one of those accidents [illegible] no human brain could foresee, no human energy ward off, intervened and completely ruined the undertaking. The division connecting McCook with Crittenden in moving to a new position vacated the line completely under a misinterpretation of orders. At that moment Bragg was hurling everything upon Thomas, who was calling for help. All of McCook's brigades were in motion, either to go to Thomas' aid or to relieve brigades which were to go. In front of the fatal gap and of the shifting brigade lines on the flanks of it Longstreet's column stood ready to take up the battle and fight down the line toward Thomas. The signal to dash forward came just as the fatal gap was opened, and two of Sheridan's brigades had detached themselves from McCook's line to cross over to Thomas. Longstreet had eight brigades, some of them composed of seasoned veterans of the peninsular battles, of Fredericksburg, Antietam and Gettysburg. Their onslaught was terrific, and the unguarded ends of the Union line upon each side of the gap were crushed in a twinkling. It would be wrong to call the disaster to Rosecrans' men a rout. It was the dash of a tidal wave that lifted and bore along everything in its pathway. The Union generals were carried off their feet by forces none but a god could withstand.

The heroic Lytle came with two brigades marching column front to the edge of the flood just as the Union line disappeared. Forming his men on a new front to face Longstreet he sought to resist his triumphant march. It was simply sweeping at the ocean tides with a broom. His formations were broken as fast as made. Planting his colors for one desperate effort, he told his subordinates what was expected of them, called up his personal staff and placed himself at the head of column, bleeding the while from three wounds already received in the encounter. To his aids, who begged him to leave the field, he said:

"We can die but once. Now is our time. Let us charge!"

Turning he went forward and met instantaneous death in the volley of bullets which greeted his bold advance.

Longstreet's masterly lunge broke the right of the Union army to pieces. There was no crossing over to Thomas, and Sheridan, with the rest, Rosecrans and all, went whirling back toward Chattanooga. But there was a ray of hope yet for Thomas. Gordon Granger, with the leading brigades of the reserve corps, coming up from Murfreesboro and strung along the route of march, reached Rossville the night of the 19th and was ordered to hold that point as well as the road to Chattanooga. All the morning of the 20th he heard the guns on Thomas' battlefield and saw the Confederates piling brigade after brigade of reserves upon the Union left. On the other hand he could detect no sign of help going to Thomas from the Union right. In defiance of his orders he marched with three brigades to succor the "Rock of Chickamauga" in the last cast. He reached the field at the most critical hour of that eventful day. On the way he saw three divisions of Confederates filing through a gorge to attack Thomas in the flank and rear. Gathering up his regiments as they marched to the scene, he literally hurled them upon the threatening force. The gallant Steedman seized a regimental flag and led his brigade on a charge, which in 20 minutes cleared the gorge and checked the enemy's march. He then marched his line upon the crest of the ridge and formed it for battle. It was none too soon for the Confederates, directed by Longstreet, determined to retake it at all hazards. One after another fresh and reserve divisions were brought up by Longstreet and on the Union side two were sent to Granger's aid. The battle lasted two hours, until darkness put an end to it. With frightful slaughter the Confederates were repulsed. In that fight General Helm was killed, leading his Orphan brigade of Kentucky. He fell like Lytle at the other end of the line. His brigade numbered 1,763 when the battle opened and 432 when it emerged from the awful carnage on Horseshoe ridge. On the ridge in the twilight hour the day was decided. Then and there the victory for Thomas was won.

Lee's Surrender to Grant.

Lee never handed Grant his sword, consequently Grant never gave it back. What Lee expected to do when he went forward to meet Grant nobody knows. The scrupulous care with which he dressed himself and his precaution to put on his sword and sash indicate that he wished to be prepared for any contingency.

If Grant had demanded a formal surrender and Lee had accepted his terms Lee would have swallowed the pill and made the surrender of his sword to Grant.

After what Lee's father had written in criticism of Cornwallis, though we don't believe any prompting of that sort was necessary, never would Lee have thought of delegating such an unpleasant duty to another.

However, the terms arranged between Grant and Lee were that the Confederate officers were to retain their side arms and all the officers and soldiers the horses which were their own property. So there was no "sword business" in the surrender. Grant behaved very handsomely at Appomattox. Our people will never forget this.—Richmond Dispatch.

An Invitation to Dinner.

In his private capacity, the Hindoo is frequently very hospitably inclined. The fact that his caste prejudices preclude him from eating with Europeans does not always prevent him offering an invitation to dinner—his idea of English hospitality. This consists in his driving his guests to a hotel and paying for dinner, while he awaits its consumption in another part of the house. It takes one some little time to get used to this mode of procedure, but after awhile one sees the propriety of accepting the kindness in the spirit which prompts it.—Chambers' Journal.

HE LAY IN WAIT FOR HIMSELF.

The Queer Experience of a Somnambulist Farmer.

Archibald Clark, a farmer living a few miles from Greenup, Ky., is without doubt the most remarkable somnambulist in the state. During the past summer he has been accusing his neighbors of slipping into his truck patches at night and cultivating them. Of course he did not object to this, but thought it most extraordinary. It was also a strange fact that they always did at night just what he had intended to do the following day.

Becoming anxious to know which of his neighbors he was indebted to for the kindness, he spent many wakeful nights watching his truck patches, but without success. No one ever came into them when he was on the watch, but when he would miss watching for a night there was invariably some work done.

A short time ago he drove his wagon into his potato patch late one evening, so that he could load it early in the morning. He was very anxious to get well on his way to market before sun up. However, he overslept himself and got up in a terrible stew, but great was his surprise when he went into the potato patch to find the wagon already loaded and the horses hitched to it, ready to start, thus saving him a couple of hours' time and hard work.

One night his wife saw him stealing out of the house in his night clothes, and following him to the barn saw him take a mattock and go out and begin digging up grubs in an old fence row. She then understood who had been doing her husband's work.

MADE THE BURGLAR APOLOGIZE.

How Two San Francisco Girls Dealt With a Midnight Intruder.

Two San Francisco girls, the Misses Grace and Mamie Campbell, have shown their fellow citizens what the feminine method of dealing with a burglar is. They are well known schoolteachers. They did not succeed in capturing the thief, but they made him apologize. This is the story as Miss Grace tells it:

"We were alone in the house, and it was nearly midnight. My sister had retired and I was reading a book when I heard a noise. I called to my sister and told her that somebody was in the house. We ran to the head of the stairs and just then we heard the door click as if some one had closed it. As I raised the window I saw the burglar going down the front steps, and I ordered him to halt. He seemed to take my command in earnest, for I told him that I would shoot if he took another step. Mamie had opened the front door by this time, and we had the man cornered in front of the house. We both commanded him to stand still, and he obeyed. Then he began to apologize, and said he had got into the wrong house. For several minutes we held the burglar at bay, hoping that some person might come along who would render us assistance. We had no weapons or else we might have completed our capture by turning the burglar over to the police.

"After making his apologies, the burglar finally got away from us. He edged his way to the fence when I left the window to join my sister at the door. Then suddenly he made a dash and ran down the street and disappeared. Had we been in proper attire we should certainly have grappled with him and placed him under arrest. I should not have been the least bit frightened to have walked up to the burglar and ordered him to throw up his hands and handed him over to an officer. We simply lacked the arms to carry out that plan."

MINNIE CAMPBELL. GRACE CAMPBELL.

A Gambler's Lucky Button.

Ex-Congressman John J. O'Neill of St. Louis tells this story: "There was a noted gambler in St. Louis who had been playing in hard luck for a long time. He made up his mind never to gamble again, but one evening the old habit proved so overpowering that he walked mechanically into a well known resort where he had often wooed the fickle goddess over the faro table. A game was in progress. He put a dollar on the queen and lost. Dollar after dollar went the same way, and once more misery and deprivation stared him in the face. He put on his last dollar, and that went too. Absolute despondency seized him, and his frame shook with a paroxysm of remorse. While so shaking a red button on his coat flew off and fell on the faro table, covering the jack. The dealer thought he had deposited a red chip and dealt the cards. The jack won. All night he kept the button in play, and it won every time, until the dealer announced that the bank was busted. And now the man is traveling in Switzerland to regain his health."

A Foolhardy Burglar.

A foolhardy burglar sneaked into the house of Mrs. James Bellings, at Ashley, Pa., and up into the room where she was snugly sleeping. Mrs. Bellings was awakened by the strange sound, and, discovering the man under the bed, she arose, seized the intruder by the neck and held him until her husband got his eyes open. Mrs. Bellings sent her other half for a policeman, she all the while holding the burglar. That was the most shamefaced looking thief that has ever trudged into the Luzerne lockup.

SOME OF THE FIRST.

The first tool made by human hands was a celt, or handleless ax of chipped stone. With it a man can kill or skin game, hack wood or spike an enemy.

A handle put upon the celt transversely makes it an ax; a handle longitudinally makes an arrow. The bow, according to Professor F. N. Cushing, came long afterward.

The first boat was a log bestridden by the navigator, who paddled it with a stick. Hollowing the log with a stone celt was the next step.

The first bridge was a footlog. A handrail came next, then the rude braces which made a larger span possible. By the time of Cæsar, as every schoolboy knows, bridges had become formidable structures.

The first horse had five toes and was about the size of a fox. The middle toe is left. The others have perished from lack of use, though traces of them are to be found in the "splint" on the side of a horse's leg.

The first house was a cave. Of that there can be no doubt. The buildings of today can be traced through Greek and Roman sources back to the Egyptian originals, which again grow from the forms of the ancient rock temples.

A FILTER INSIDE YOU

HOW YOUR BLOOD IS KEPT PURE.

Health Comes From Pure Blood. Pure Blood Depends on the Filter Inside You.

Your Kidneys Keep Your Blood Pure If They Are Well—A Few Facts About Them, and How To Make Them Well When They Are Sick.

Your blood is what nourishes your body.

New blood is made every minute. It goes to the lungs, gets fresh air, and then passes through the body. In passing, it deposits new flesh, fat, bones, etc., and takes up worn out matter.

This worn out matter goes to the kidneys. The kidneys filter it out of the blood and throw it out of the body.

That is, when you are well, they do.

When your kidneys are well they act as perfect filters, to keep your blood pure. When they are sick, they act imperfectly. They leave the bad matter in. Sometimes they take out the good.

There is nothing more poisonous than bad blood.

A proof of this is rheumatism. It is simply a blood-poisoning caused by the bad matter left in the blood by sick kidneys.

Bright's disease is the kidneys working the other way—taking the good food out of the blood.

Both kinds of kidney sickness are dangerous.

Both can be cured by Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills.

One of the most wonderful facts of our body is this natural filter inside us. Our kidneys are very important organs. We don't take enough care of them. We are sick oftener than there is any need for. It is simply because we take no heed to our kidneys.

Sick kidneys show their effects in many different diseases.

Rheumatism and Bright's disease are very common. Anæmia, neuralgia, pain in the back, dizziness, bladder troubles, gravel, diabetes, sleeplessness, nervousness.

These are only a few symptoms, or so-called "diseases." Back of them all are the sick kidneys.

Once the filters can be made to work, all these symptoms will disappear.

Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills are made principally from the roots of the asparagus plant, which has a special curative action on the kidneys. It gives them new life and strength. It helps them to do their work as it ought to be done. It cures their sickness. It cleans and renews the filter.

When the kidneys are well you will feel a great difference at once. Your complexion will clear, and your whole body will get renewed life and freshness.

This is the effect of Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills on the sick kidneys, of the re-vitalized kidneys on the impure blood.

With a course of Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills you will get new life. They will cure you when other medicines, which do not reach the real seat of disease, cannot help you.

Dr. Hobb's Sparagus Kidney Pills are for sale by all druggists, price 50c per box, or will be sent prepaid to any address on receipt of price.

An interesting booklet, explaining about the kidneys and their power for good and evil, sent free on request. Address Hobb's Medicine Co., Chicago or San Francisco.

SAVED BY HIS CHEEK.

A Railroad Depot Agent's Experience With the General Manager.

A dozen of us were waiting at a railroad station in Georgia. As nobody knew how long we must wait it was only natural that one after another should go to the ticket window and inquire.

"Dunno," was the gruff response to each inquirer.

That was about what was expected, and yet it didn't please. We got together on the platform and discussed the matter, and while we were talking a man drove up to the depot from the town. Seeing the crowd, he came over and asked what was up. When he had been informed, he replied:

"I will try my luck with him and see how I come out."

He made the same inquiry, and the agent looked up and replied:

"How many more times am I going to tell you I dunno?"

"Not more than once," said the gentleman as he reached for a telegraph blank.

Five minutes later he showed us the dispatch. It was to a station agent 30 miles away, and it read, "Leave assistant in charge and come down and take full possession here." The name at the end of the dispatch was that of the general manager of the road.

"How much?" he asked as he handed it in to the agent, who was also operator.

"This goes d. h.," replied the man after reading it over.

He began ticking it off as cool as you please, and when he had finished he rose up, put on his hat and overcoat and came into the waiting room.

"Have you any idea when that train will be here?" quietly asked the man who sent the dispatch.

"She's just coming around the curve now. All aboard!" replied the agent. And as the train drew up he was the first one to board it, leaving the office to run itself till the other man could come down.

"Did we come out much ahead on that deal?" I asked of the manager as we got seated on the train.

"Well, n-o-o, I don't think we did," he drawled. "I guess I'll send the cheeky cuss back on the next train and raise his salary $5 a month."—St. Louis Republic.

Superfluous Formality.

"Sorry, madam, but you will have to get somebody to identify you."

"The idea! Don't you see my name right there on the check?"—Boston Transcript.

"YES, DARLING."

"I think you're very unreasonable," said Helen Morton tearfully.

"And I think you're very selfish," said Dick Morton angrily.

"Well, I am going to that masquerade party and you may just as well make up your mind to it right now."

"I may just as well make up my mind, then, that you are going to do just exactly as you please, regardless of my wishes or my judgment," said Dick.

"When your judgment is as much at fault as it appears to be in this instance, you may make up your mind that I shall exercise my own judgment."

"Your what?" inquired Dick sarcastically, and Helen was so angry at this last shot that she flounced herself out of the room.

They had been married just six months. Helen was 19 and Dick was 23. They had always agreed perfectly about their mutual affairs till the question of the mask ball came up.

Dick did not like the young fellow who had sent them the invitation. Paul Elliott had been a little too attentive to Helen of late to suit Dick, who was a trifle jealous, as most husbands of young, pretty women are.

Helen was fond of attention. But she was perfectly devoted to her husband, although she did love to tease him at times.

So she pretended to flirt with Paul Elliott, to Dick's intense annoyance and chagrin.

He lighted a cigar and started off down town without seeing Helen. It was the first time he had ever left the house without kissing her goodby, and she watched him from an upper window with a lump in her throat and an angry pucker between her pretty brows.

"All right, Mr. Dick," she said defiantly, brushing a tear away at the same time. "You can be spunky and so can I. I'll go to that mask ball if I have to get a divorce to do it."

And the silly girl immediately began her arrangements for her costume and mask. She telephoned to her friends, the Browns, who, she knew, were going, and asked them to take her with them.

Helen decided to wear an old fashioned gown made in the style of the frocks of colonial days. It was of a rich yellow brocade, and, as the modiste said to her, would suit her brunette beauty wonderfully well. Then she bought a yellow ostrich feather fan and amber satin slippers and silk stockings of the same hue. Long, yellow suede gloves completed her purchases, and she went home to luncheon tired and unhappy, but with renewed determination.

The next night at 9 o'clock Helen stood in her room, gazing in the long cheval mirror at herself. Her powdered hair was very becoming, and she turned instinctively to where Dick always stood when they were dressing to go out to seek his admiration. But Dick was not there, and with a smothered sob she gathered up her fan, gloves, bouquet and opera cloak and went slowly down stairs.

It was a brilliant party, but Helen enjoyed it not at all. She could not forget Dick, try as she would, and she felt all the time as if she must go off somewhere and have a "good cry."

Once two tears did run down behind her little black mask, but she quickly wiped them away and danced and laughed and chatted on. Presently she saw a tall man coming toward her.

"I wonder if that is Paul Elliott," she said to herself. He was masked, of course, but wore simply a domino over his evening suit.

"May I have the pleasure of this dance?" he asked.

Helen's heart stood still a moment and then went galloping away with her. It was Dick's voice.

"Certainly," she said in a queer tone.

They waltzed away together, she thinking: "Surely he will know my step. No one else ever danced so well with him, he always tells me so."

But the tall man said nothing except some commonplaces about the music and the costumes.

When they stopped, he drew her into the conservatory, and, having found a quiet nook behind some big palms, he sank down beside her and began the most finished flirtation the heart of a coquette could desire.

Helen was dumfounded. Could this be her Dick—her loyal, devoted husband? A spasm of jealousy contracted her heart. This, then, was the way he acted in her absence.

She replied wittily to his pretty speeches and held up her end of the little pastime very well. But just as soon as she could she said, in response to a tender remark of his:

"But, my dear sir, you know you don't mean that. It's very pretty and it amuses me, but I don't believe it. Why are you so shallow in your sentiments? If you had ever really cared for any one, you could not play at love in this fashion."

"The only woman I ever cared for was just like all the rest of your fair sex, madam," said the domino sarcastically.

"She discarded the real love of a lifetime, the affection of a man who would have died for her, for the meaningless attentions of a fop. It flattered her vanity, and you know that after all that is what really counts with a woman."

He eyed her keenly, but could not see the mouth beneath the short, black mask, for she had turned her head away, and the white hand that lay trembling on her knee was the only sign of her agitation.

"Let us go back to the dance," he said quietly, "unless you would like me to get you an ice."

The lady in yellow seemed unable to speak, but she made a gesture of assent and he started away to get an ice for her.

Helen snatched off her mask as soon as he disappeared and gave way to her feelings completely. She sobbed as if her heart would break, and when the tall domino came back she sprang up and cried chokingly:

"Oh, Dick, I'm not such a wicked wretch at all. I love you dearly, and I hate that man and everybody else but you."—Exchange.

The Cheerful Idiot.

"Why," asked the new boarder, "why do you say that there is a semblance between riding a bicycle and sailing a boat?"

"Because," said the cheerful idiot, "because you lose the wind when you get on the wrong tack."

Every one with the exception of the boarder, who wore bloomers, looked sad.—Indianapolis Journal.

Mistress (to cook)—Your name, Mary, and my daughter's being the same makes matters somewhat confusing. Now, how do you like, say, the name of Bridget?

Cook—Sure, mum, it's not me that's particular. I'm willing to call the young lady anything you like.—London Tit-Bits.

There is a horse for sale at the city building. It was brought in and placed in the pound a couple of weeks ago, and is said to belong to a farmer residing near Cochranton. Marshal Blain went to him today and informed him of the fact that the horse was locked up. He denied owning it, and stated that he had bought it of Frank McWherter under certain conditions, one of the conditions being that it could pull a certain wagon. It failed to draw the wagon, and the man turned it out The animal will be sold to pay for its keeping, and if a buyer is not found soon it will eat its head off.

THE CITY IN BRIEF.

The Tenderlegs returned this afternoon from a two weeks' hunt in Michigan.

Pat Masterson has the foundation about ready for a fine new residence on Olney avenue.

The dog poisoner has transferred his field of work from the east to the north section of the city

Charles Van Fleet, formerly of Columbus, has accepted a position on the sales force at the dry goods house of Uhler, Phillips & Co

There will be a meeting of the directors of the Marion Manufacturing company Monday evening. At that time the directors will organize and elect officers.

Mr. Bailey, a liveryman, was among the victims of pickpockets at LaRue Friday. His pocket was cut out and a pocketbook containing money and other valuables taken.

P. J. Egan has been employed as engineer at the brewery, and will also have charge of the ice plant, which is now being tested. It is expected to begin brewing beer next week.

Henry Flock, one of Bucyrus most substantial citizens, visited Mrs. Fred. Hochstetter, on Vine street, Friday and today. Mr. Flock had not visited Marion before in twenty-four years.

Patsy McCue and Ben Leonard arrived here this morning from Cleveland, where they have just been released from the workhouse. It is not likely that either one of them will remain here long.

The city was well filled with fakirs this forenoon. The legion of sure-thing people who visited LaRue came here today, and took trains for various fields of labor. There was every class of crooks among them.

Randolph Coleman, secretary of the American Ashalt company, was in the city today, and it was expected that a party from Lima and Sandusky would be here during the afternoon to inspect the asphalt, but up to noon they had not put in their appearance

George Jones, who was accidentally shot the other day, is getting along as well as could be expected, but the wound made by the bullet turned out to be worse than at first thought. His hip became terribly inflamed, and it was feared that he would not recover as rapidly as expected.

In connection with the birth of the daughter of Mr and Mrs. George Adam Schweinfurth, there is an odd coincidence. The child was born on the birthday of both of its grandfathers. Both Adam Schweinfurth and Frederick Follmeth celebrate their birthdays on the date that the little Miss Schweinfurth arrived.

The firm of E. J. Grosscup & Company has changed its name to Grosscup & Plank, and at the same time is planning a campaign for an increase of business in the retail trade. Mr. Plank, the resident partner, has engaged office room at the Marion Bazar, secured a telephone and opened a full fledged retail coal and wood office.

Senator John Bain was made administrator of the estates of Richard and Joseph Carter, supposed to be deceased. STAR readers will remember the full account given some weeks ago of $600 left uncalled for by the two Carters for the last thirteen years and in the hands of the county treasurer. Assuming that the two Carters were dead Mr Bain was appointed administrator of their estates and the money, now amounting to nearly $700, will be distributed among the known heirs.

Day Clerk Campbell, of the New Kerr House, had a little trouble today with W. B. Melrose, the colored bootblack at the house. Melrose was drunk and asked Campbell for money that he claimed was due him. Campbell told him that there was no money coming to him and ordered him out of the office. The colored fellow refused to go and picked up a spittoon and threw it at Mr. Campbell. He was promptly knocked down by the clerk and was held until Marshal Blain arrived and took him to the city prison, where he awaits a hearing.

Burn Pocahontas Coal!

A coal for every shop and hearth:
The best of coal that's burned on earth.

Bright are the fires that every day roll,
Under the weight of POCAHONTAS COAL.
North and south, east and west, with bushels a score,
Neatly trimmed with full measure for rich and poor.
A boon to the town are these gems from the mine,
Bring warmth to all hearts like rare old wine.
Each load is well weighed and a shovelful tossed,
Receipting for what in the streets may be lost.
Dense and bright are its flames which no weather hinders,
Entirely free from sulphur and cinders.
Smokeless and pure, with a light for your soul,
Is Prendergast's Bituminous Pocahontas Coal!
Every buyer has nothing but bountiful praises,
In fall, in winter, or when bloom the spring daisies.
One trial will convince mind, body and soul,
Light and heat bring but ashes from

POCAHONTAS COAL!

CAUSING COMMENT.

The Legality of Mr. and Mrs. Washington's Marriage Questioned.

Since the STAR published the article in regard to the marriage of Walter Washington and Isabella Cloud there has been more or less comment about the matter.

The woman is evidently ignorant of the crime she has committed if the marriage is not legal She says that her first marriage was not legal as she was under age, but at the same time admits that her mother secured the license for her Mrs. Washington thinks her last union is legal because her first husband has married again and is now living in Union or Logan county, but that is not certain

She does not claim that she was ever divorced, but seems simply to be ignorant of what she has done. Her present husband is working on Church street, and they expect to remove from here to Columbus soon When her relatives called on her and informed the woman that her marriage was not a legal one, and was apt to cause trouble she laughed about the matter and only gave the reasons mentioned for it being legal in the eyes of the law and did not offer any evidence that would substantiate her story.

It is expected that trouble will be caused in regard to the matter. Charles Sherfield, a relative of the woman, stated Friday night that he expected that an investigation would be made and arrests probably follow. He says that the marriage is not legal; that the woman has another husband living from whom she has never been divorced. The matter is causing considerable talk among the colored people.

THE CANNON ALL RIGHT

The Test Proves Very Satisfactory to the Gun Squad of Company G.

The cannon owned by Company G is all right and gives perfect satisfaction. It was thought best to try it Friday afternoon and the gun squad, in uniform, drew the gun to Ivanhoe addition, where it was given a thorough test. Seven shots were fired and each one of them proved that there was nothing wrong with the little gun.

At first three quarter-pound charges were tried and they proving all right a couple of half-pound charges were placed in the gun and fired, and then a three-quarter-pound charge, and finally a pound charge. The gun makes a good deal of noise and when it fires a salute Wednesday it will be heard over a greater portion of the city.

Next Teachers' Institute.

The executive committee of the Marion county teachers' institute association has decided upon the time for the next institute meeting and have hired instructors. The next institute will be held the first week in August, 1896, and the instructors will be L. D. Bonebrake, superintendent of the Mt. Vernon schools, and Arthur Powell, of Marion.

That Joyful Feeling

With the exhilarating sense of renewed health and strength and internal cleanliness, which follows the use of Syrup of Figs, is unknown to the few who have not progressed beyond the old time medicines and the cheap substitutes sometimes offered but never accepted by the well informed.

Sunflowers Will Bloom.

The "Sunflowers" are requested to meet at Sister Lou Johnston's corner of Prospect and Center streets, at 7 o'clock Saturday evening, to complete arrangements for a social session.
